INTRODUCTION.

THE curious production which now appears for the first time in print under the auspices of the Camden Society, is taken from a MS. preserved in the Bodleian Library, but originally belonging to Archbishop Laud, as appears from the following note inscribed in the fly-leaf: “Liber Guil. Laud. Archiepi. Cant. et Cancellar. Universit. Oxon. 1637.” It is a small quarto volume, written on paper in characters which betoken a period not later than the middle of the sixteenth century. It is unfortunately, however, imperfect, as several leaves have been entirely torn out; and some few have undergone a partial mutilation. Those that remain amount to the number of fifty-five. Had no other copy of the work been in existence, there would have been no means of ascertaining the extent of the loss which the Oxford MS. has sustained. From a notice, however, in Montfaucon’s Biblioth. Bibliothecarum, t. i. p. 502, I was led to infer, that another and more complete copy was preserved in the Ambrosian Library at Milan. The following is the notice referred to in the Catalogue of that Library: "Nicandri Nuncii (r. Nucii) Corcyrensis Historiarum Libri tres." From which it appears, that the entire work consisted of three books, whereas the Bodleian MS. only contains the two first; nor is the second even complete, a small portion of it having been torn out at the end. I suspect, indeed, that this last MS., having been written in England, never had the third book in it, this having been added by our author subsequently.

It would have been most satisfactory to have inspected myself the Ambrosian MS. and to have completed from its more ample contents the deficiency of the Oxford copy; but my engagements not permitting me to leave England, the Rev. Ch. Balston of C. C. C. in this University, in his way through Milan in the summer of 1840, obligingly undertook to inspect the MS.; and to obtain, if possible, for me, a transcript of the portion wanting in ours. Mr. Balston readily obtained a sight of the MS. and ascertained from a comparison of its contents, that the deficiency of the Oxford copy amounted to about eight or ten pages; and he was enabled also to inform me, which was of consequence, that the Second Book of Nicander alone related to the History of England. He was, however, unable to obtain the desired transcript ; nor was a subsequent application, made through the Rev. S. Reay, Laudian Professor of Arabic, more successful : it being intimated in reply to that gentleman, as a reason for withholding the copy, that there was an intention, on the part of one of the officers of the Ambrosian Library, of publishing the work in question.

Being thus precluded from the assistance I had hoped to derive from Milan, I have been under the necessity of publishing the Oxford MS. in its imperfect state. Should, however, as it is to be hoped, the publication of the entire work of Nicander Nucius take place from the Ambrosian copy, the defect will be more than rectified ; and all regret at the failure of my application will be entirely removed.

Respecting Nicander Nucius, our author, I have been able to collect no other information than what he himself has supplied us with in the First Book of his Travels, a short sketch of which will be the most appropriate mode of introducing him to the reader.

He states in the opening of his work, which is dedicated to a friend, whose name does not appear, that whilst residing at Venice, whither he had been driven from his own country by various misfortunes, there arrived in that city an embassy from the Emperor Charles V. to the Court of the Sultan Solyman. The chief person employed on this service was Gerardus, a native of Flanders, who is described as a person of great learning and acquirements, and versed not only in Greek and Latin literature, but also in Hebrew, as his numerous writings on that language abundantly testify. Nicander having been previously known to the Ambassador, waited upon him in the course of his stay at Venice, and made an offer of his services during the journey he was about to undertake to Constantinople, which having been courteously accepted, he was presently admitted into the Ambassador's suite, and travelled with him through Illyria and Thrace to the Turkish capital. Our Author does not enter into any details in this part of his travels, since he wrote, as he states, for his countrymen, who were sufficiently acquainted with Constantinople and Turkish affairs, but were more ignorant respecting the state of those countries which are situate in the western parts of Europe. Passing then rapidly over the journey to the Bosphorus, and the return of the embassy to Venice, he commences the descriptive part of his narrative from the latter city on his way to the Low Countries, whither he was to accompany his patron. Proceeding through Padua, Ferrara, Mantua, and Verona, of which cities he gives detailed accounts, as well as of the Po and its course, he then quits Italy, passing through Trent, where he observes, that the famous Council was then sitting, and crossing the Alps by the Brenner Pass, descends into Germany. On his arrival at Augsburg, the attention of our traveller was much attracted by the new religion, which, he says, had lately sprung up; and his account of it is curious. “This was the first city in Germany,” he says, “in which we met with the religion at variance with the Roman Pontiff. For it had embraced, not long before, the doctrines of one called Martin Luther, and a certain Philip Melanchthon, men of reputation on the score of learning, both in Latin and Greek, and also in Hebrew. These then practise nothing in unison with, or similar to, the observances of our Church. With regard, indeed, to the symbol of faith, they have made no innovation; but with respect to ecclesiastical traditions, they differ altogether from us, and reject the whole. And they neither admit commemorations, nor festivals of saints, nor fasts or lents,* nor holydays, nor liturgies, nor the decrees of œcumenical councils, nor yet those ratified at various times by special councils, and approved by sovereigns : in a word, they allow themselves none of the ecclesiastical usages which are admitted amongst us. They work during all the days of the week ; but respect in the highest degree the day named after our Lord. They will retain, however, no images or statues of saints, either in their churches or dwellings ; and they have banished* the whole order of monks and nuns, and brought back their clergy to the mode of life adopted by the laity. Neither have they instituted any grades among their clergy ; affirming that these are the inventions of superstitious men. And on the Lord's day, as I before stated, they assemble in their churches ; and there both men and women promiscuously, and of all ages, sit down in rows. And some one, who is deemed well versed in the Scriptures, ascends the pulpit, and instructs them forsooth in the Gospel, all listening with pious reverence. This instruction being ended, they chaunt certain hymns and harmonious melodies in praise as they say of Christ. And when the psalmody is over, they return home ; and before they proceed to take their repast, they send to their poorer neighbours some portion of it. And they are wont to do nothing besides this in their churches. But with respect to those who are initiated by baptism, they select certain men, to whom all bear witness for the excellence and sanctity of their lives. And these fulfil that office, baptising the children in the usual manner, except that they do not recite so many prayers. But they celebrate the Holy Communion in this manner. Having assembled together and broken bread, they distribute it to each other; and in like manner they partake of the wine in the cup, saying that they perform this in remembrance of our Saviour; for this is accounted communion and participation amongst them. And simplicity in regard to religion is much prized by them; and they avoid as much as possible strife and dissensions. Nor are they unmindful to assist those who are in want. But they detest the Roman Pontiff, and heap on him insults without number, both in their writings and their speeches; nor will they in any way submit to the dogmas of the Romish Church. And they call themselves Evangelists, assuming to themselves, forsooth, the knowledge of the Gospel as it ought to be understood. And they consider all other Christians as superstitious, and living under a delusion. To this mode of worship then they adhere in a surprising manner; and no one could prevail on them by arguments, however persuasive, to change their tenets, but they hold them most firmly, and retain them until death. Of this we could judge with our own eyes, for the city of Augsburg had embraced this new religion most surprisingly; and most of the other cities of Germany have likewise been caught by the novelty of this form of worship.

“And we have here given an account of what we ourselves have seen in regard to these matters.”

On quitting Augsburg, our author proceeds to Ulm, which affords him an opportunity for describing the course of the Danube. From thence he appears to have traversed the plains of Suabia, and reached the Rhine, which he crosses, and successively passes through the cities of Spire, Worms, Mentz, Coblentz, and Cologne, of all which he gives detailed accounts, especially the latter, and its numerous relics and curiosities. He then digresses somewhat from his narrative to touch upon the doctrines of the fanatical leader of the Anabaptists, whom he calls John of Munster,* which he says had made a great sensation some ten years previously.

“This man,” who, according to his report, “was one of the citizens of Munster, not of the higher or more wealthy classes, but a low and obscure artizan, being a tailor by trade, and thereby gaining his livelihood, began to preach in the streets of that city, affirming that he was an Apostle sent by God for the salvation of the inhabitants. On which a great many persons began to follow him ; and not long after the chief persons in the city embraced his tenets, and elected him to be their legislator and governor, and besought him to give them laws and a rule of life. And he is said to have devised for them these regulations and statutes. From the first, then, he made away with, and entirely rejected, all the dogmas and practices of the Roman Pontiff. Then he allotted to each an equal share of property, awarding the same even to him who previously had nothing. And he decreed, that nothing else should be taught but the Gospel alone, and the Five Books of Moses. He moreover ordered all the clergy to be banished, or be classed with the other citizens. And that all men should take to themselves wives ; and that those females who should conceive and bear children, should be attended to and held in honour, but that the barren should be expelled from the state. Since the Gospel forsooth says, ‘ every tree which beareth not fruit is cut down and cast into the fire.’ But he, out of humanity, did not burn them, but sent them out of the city. He would not, however, permit any one to remain idle ; but compelled all to labour in some craft, being desirous of fulfilling the saying, ‘ he that is idle, let him not eat.’ And he proclaimed himself to be an Apostle of God and the Divine Spirit. And some of these men remained as if in a trance ; abstaining altogether from food, whether of solid nutriment or liquid, alleging, ‘ that man must not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth,” &c. and they persisted in waiting for the heavenly bread with open mouths. And many of them fell to the ground speechless ; but others stood up also without taking nourishment,* though not opening their mouths. And the greater number persevering in their folly and madness perished. And these were accounted by the rest fortunate and blessed.”

Our author, proceeding in his narrative, affirms that, this state of things having continued three years, the Emperor Charles summoned the leader of these people, and some of his associates, into his presence at Brussels ; and having appointed some of the ablest of the clergy to inquire into their opinions, when he found they could not be prevailed upon to abandon their heresy, but persisted in affirming, that the Divine Spirit had spoken to them, and that their leader would not return to the religion and usages of his country, he ordered him to be burnt alive, and the rest of his adherents to be decapitated. Many, however, were induced through terror to embrace again the faith of their country, and the observances of the Romish Church. This happened, he states, in Munster, more than ten years previously. And similar practices, and even worse than these, took place in several other cities of Germany.

On quitting Cologne, our traveller proceeds to Aix-la-Chapelle, of which he gives an ample description, as well as of the ceremonial observed at the election of the Emperor of the Germans. From thence he journeys to Louvain, whose University he notices as celebrated and flourishing ; and finally arrives at Brussels, where the Emperor Charles was then holding his court. On his arrival, Gerardus was admitted to an audience by his Sovereign ; and laid before him the result of his mission to the Sultan. Our Author, being still in his suite, accompanied him on this occasion, as well as in other visits of ceremony he paid to several persons of rank, and especially to Maria Queen of Hungary,* sister of the Emperor, but then a widow, and residing at Brussels.

Not many days after, the Emperor departed on a tour through the provinces of Brabant and Flanders, proceeding by Mechlin to Antwerp, having Gerardus and Nican-der in attendance upon him. Our traveller's account of the latter city, and its great commercial prosperity at this period, is interesting, there being scarcely any maritime state which did not send ships to its port and merchants to its exchange ; so that he does not hesitate to estimate its trade as superior to that of any other city at that time.

From Antwerp the Emperor removed his Court to Ghent. This town, as Nucius relates, had not many years previously revolted from its Sovereign, who being then in Spain, had been summoned in haste to quell this formidable insurrection in the Netherlands ; and, for the purpose of greater speed, had not hesitated to traverse the kingdom of France. On his arrival in Flanders, he took measures to put down the rebellion, partly by conciliation, and partly also by the adoption of severe measures against the ringleaders. Quitting Flanders and Brabant, our author next proceeds into Holland, and visits Rotterdam : “a town celebrated,” he says, “as the birthplace of Erasmus, whose reputation is great among the nations of the west.* This man lived not long before us; and he has composed many important works which have been written by him in a most excellent manner, not only in Latin, but in Greek. And in regard to style and elegance and the clearness of his ideas, he will be found on comparison inferior to none who have been celebrated for wisdom in ancient times. This man, then, having been born and educated in this city, of parents not wealthy, but of moderate and independent means, and having commenced his education at school, and having been further instructed at Louvain and Cologne, travelled to Italy and Venice, and studied logic in Bologna and Padua; and having become known to many, and been celebrated for his learning by persons of the first consequence, was invited by the King of France to visit his Court; but this he declined, and resided the greater part of his time in Germany, at Basle and Argentina. Having then attained to a very advanced age, he terminated his life in Argentina, a city of note in Germany, where he is buried. He left behind him a great many works and a very high reputation, and was about eighty years old when he died."

* τοῖς ἐσπερίοις.

After visiting Holland, our Author returned to Brussels, from whence Gerardus having been despatched on state affairs to Liege, Nicander is led to visit the coal mines in the neighbourhood of that city ; and the account of what he saw, strongly tinged as it is with the love of the marvellous, common to our traveller's countrymen in ancient times, is sufficiently curious to be placed before the reader. " In this city," says he, " and all the neighbouring country, they are accustomed to burn a certain black substance, stony and shining, and producing hot embers without smoke. But when the coal has been consumed, it yields no cinders, but a very fine dust is scattered through the air. These stones they dig out of the deepest recesses of the earth, finding certain veins from which they extract them ; but a peculiar prodigy takes place when they are being dug out. For the miners are accustomed to excavate, at a distance of eight or more stadia from the city, below the river, about thirty cubits or more. When they meet with this mineral, they form a spacious cavern ; but they are not able to throw out the stones immediately, for fire on a sudden bursts forth, and encompasses the whole cavern.

" When the miners are desirous of extracting the coal, they put on a linen garment, which has neither been bleached nor dipped in water. This covers them from head to foot, leaving only certain apertures for the eyes, that they may be able to see through them ; they also take a staff in their hands, which serves to guide and direct their steps in the passage leading to the cave. The mincr then draws near to the fire, and frightens it with his staff. The fire then flies away, and contracts itself by little and little ; having then expended itself, it collects itself together in a surprising manner, and becoming very small, remains quite still in a corner. But it behoves the man who wears the linen garment to stand over the flame when at rest, always terrifying it with his staff. Whilst he performs this service, the miners extract the stones ; but as soon as they have left the cave, the dormant fire on a sudden bursts forth, and environs the whole cave. No one then ventures to enter without the above-mentioned garment and staff, for he would inevitably be consumed. And this we ourselves have beheld. For we were desirous of ascertaining the fact by actual experience, being admirers of the operations of nature. For we were unable to discover the cause of this, — whether these things take place through a spiritual agency ; and we were aware that linen possesses a certain mysterious power, tending in a remarkable degree to expel fire : since fire will not touch it, though it burns and consumes every thing it lays hold of in a wonderful manner. Whence also this is accounted a prodigy by the beholders.

“ But the most surprising thing is, that when the fire has retired, and the violence of the flame is quenched, instead of being exceedingly hot, it renders the cave of a gentle heat, and capable of being approached. And they call these stones, in the language of the country, ‘ oulleis ’ (houille). And whilst they are burning, no great or bright flame is emitted, but red and blue ; and this lasts for about eight hours, and possesses somewhat of a sulphureous nature.”

On quitting Liege, our traveller returns to Antwerp, where Gerardus receives from the Emperor an order to proceed on a mission to England, for which he prepares without delay, and travels by Bruges and Dunkirk to Calais. Our traveller being still in his suite, closes his first Book with a very detailed description of the latter town, then in the hands of the English. He concludes in the following terms :

“ These things which have happened to me in my travels through Germany and Belgium, I have dedicated to you—oh! best of friends—for I have readily addressed myself to you in this narrative, since you have suggested it.

To you is due whatever merit it may possess ; and your kindness will supply whatever defects may have been caused by various circumstances, whether of fatigue or successive misfortunes, and that violent love which more especially rules and controls me. Love, alas ! for that Nucia, at whose recollection alone my heart is torn and enflamed. But do thou pardon me, most sage friend, if I utter this to you in an unguarded manner, for this has been the cause of all my misfortunes. But in this one thing am I beholden to it, that it has made me acquainted with so many nations and cities, and their different forms of government. Thus far then I have spoken. But the remainder of my travels I will set forth perhaps in a Second Book."

The reader must not expect any great store of information from the somewhat quaint and simple narrative of our Coreyrean traveller. His work must be regarded rather as a literary curiosity than as supplying any considerable deficiency in the annals of our country. His stay in England seems to have been but short, and his means of information were doubtless limited ; and this has sometimes led him into great mistakes both in history and chronology. His attention seems especially to have been directed to ecclesiastical affairs ; and some of the particulars he relates respecting the suppression of monastic institutions are new and curious. So are also the speeches he puts into the mouth of Henry VIII. on that occasion. Our Author's style, though by no means pure, is yet sufficiently clear and fluent, and shews an evident acquaintance with the writers of antiquity. The MS. however, is very incorrectly written, and required alteration in several places; these I have been careful to note in every case.

I have stated, that with respect to Nicander Nucius himself, I have been unable to discover any particulars beyond what he himself relates; and this obscurity might naturally have given rise to some doubts as to the authenticity of his work, had we not possessed the means of testing the truth of his narrative by what he states respecting his patron Gerardus. The latter must evidently have been a person high in the confidence of the Emperor Charles V. and our author describes him also as a most accomplished and distinguished scholar. And yet it is singular that even the most approved biographical works should have omitted all notice of one entrusted with such important missions as those to the courts of Solymán and Henry. For the following particulars of his life, I am indebted to the researches of my friend

Count Mortara, whose profound acquirements, both in ancient and modern literature, are well known to those who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

“ Gerard Veltuyckus, or Veltwick, who, by J. C. Wolfius, in his Bibliotheca Hebræa, is erroneously called Vectuyckus, and by Bohun, in his translation of Sleidan, Feldwig, was born of a Jewish family at Ravestein in Flanders, towards the end of the fifteenth century. That he was born at Ravestein, and not at Utrecht, as some have said, we learn on his own authority in a title-page of a work of his, which I shall mention hereafter. Having high talents, he devoted his youth to study ; and made great progress, particularly in the Chaldee and Hebrew languages. He then gave himself up to teaching, and in 1528 he was made rector of the schools of Louvain, of those very schools in which he had been educated. His learning was very extensive ; but what helped to make it more generally known was his eloquence. The fame of his talents and acquirements having reached the ears of Nicholas Perrenot de Granvelle, the great minister of the Emperor Charles the Fifth, he was sent for, and employed by him in public affairs. The manner in which he conducted all those entrusted to his care raised him so much in the estimation of the Emperor, that he made him one of his councillors. In 1545 he was sent as ambassador to Constantinople, to negotiate a truce with the Sultan Soliman. It is said, that the oration which he made on his presentation, was most beautiful. Valerius Andrea, in his Bibliotheca Belgica (p. 285, edit. Lovanii, typis Jacobi Zegers, 1643, in 4to.), states, that it was printed at the time, together with a letter to N. Granvelle, in which he gives an account of his embassy, but I have not been able to find it. John Sleidan, in his Commentaries de Statu Religionis et Reipublicæ, Carolo V. Cæsare (lib. XVI. p. 435, edit. Francofurti, apud Joan. Schönwetterum, 1610, in 4to), under the year 1545, says: Cum autem in bellum Turcicum nihil ab eis (the Princes of the Empire) contribui videret, legatum mittit ad Turcam de induciis, Gerardum Veltuichum, hominem cumprimis doctum, et linguarum valde peritum.

Gerard had with him as secretary, Matthew Laurin, of Bruges, who, in passing through Venice, having met Hugo Favoli, a learned man, who had been his school-fellow, obtained permission from the ambassador for him to accompany them. Favoli afterwards wrote in Latin verse a description of his journey from Venice to Constantinople under the title of Hodæporicum Byzantinum, which was dedicated to Cardinal Granvelle (the son of Nicholas), and printed at Louvain in 1563, in 8vo. At the commencement of this description, he mentions the time and the occasion of the journey, and celebrates Gerardus, whom he calls, Velduicius heros, sermone potens, &c.

Gerardus employed all his skill, but could not bring Soliman to his terms. He then returned to the Emperor, whom he met at Brussels. From thence he accompanied him to Ratisbon; and from that city on the 22nd of July 1546, was sent again to Soliman, with whom at last he succeeded in effecting the desired truce, to the great satisfaction of the Emperor. Sleidan gives us the above date in the following words (lib. xvii. p 487): Julii die vigesimo secundo (anno 1546), Gerardus Velduichus Ratisbona remittitur Constantinopolim, quum nuper inde venisset.

In the year 1549, Charles the Fifth conferred upon him the office of treasurer of the illustrious order of the Golden Fleece. He continued, however, to be employed in the most important affairs of the empire until his death, which occurred at Vienna in 1555.

Taken from his literary pursuits in the flower of his age, he has left only one work known to us,* which nevertheless is such as to show what his acquirements were. This work is written in Hebrew, partly in verse and partly in prose ; and is intitled, שבילי תהוֹ sive Itinera Deserti ; De Judaicis disciplinis, et earum varietate ; auctore Gerardo Veltuycko Ravesteynensi : addita etiam nonnulla quæ ex illorum libris eruta cum fide Christiana consentiunt : printed Venetiis in officina Danielis Bombergi, MDXXXIX. in 4to. Wolfius calls the verse carmen elegans, et biblico stilo exaratum ; and Augustinus Beatianus wrote the following eulogy upon the book :

Hæbraæ quis nosse cupit miracula linguæ,
 Doctaque Davidicis condita verba modis :
 Carmina Gerardi insueto depicta colore
 Hæc legat, Hyblæo dulcia melle magis.
 Non tantum hinc penitus doctorum vana peribunt
 Somnia, judiciis nil facienda bonis :
 Sed longo demum discusso errore patebit
 Qua deceat Domini quærere mente vias.

From this account there can be no doubt that the Gerardus of Nucius is the same as Gerard Veltwick of Ravestein ; and our author enables us to add, to the particulars above collected from other sources, the fact of his mission to England. This it appears must have taken place about the middle of 1545, and have lasted till the spring of 1546, when Gerardus seems to have rejoined the Emperor at Brussels, leaving our author to proceed with the English army destined to invade Scotland. (P. 89.) The other embassy from the Emperor, mentioned in p. 83, but where there is an hiatus in the MS. is that of Ferdinando Gonzaga, Viceroy of Sicily, who arrived in England at Christmas 1543. See Holinshed, p. 961.

Having thus endeavoured to lay before the reader what information I have been able to procure, illustrative of the present work, I shall conclude by expressing my obligations to the Council of the Camden Society for the facilities they have afforded me in this publication, by engaging the services of the Rev. Isaac Fidler, of New Inn Hall, who has transcribed the MS. and executed the translation under my direction. I am also indebted to the same gentleman, for the few extracts from our English historical writers contained in the Notes, and the preparation of the Index, other occupations in this place not allowing me to undertake more than a general superintendence of the whole work.

You are probably acquainted, my dearest Nicolaus, with the incidents that befel me in Italy and Germany, and, to speak briefly, in Belgium within the Rhine, as far as Calais; which have been detailed by me in a

them; with whatever else I have been able to collect. What related to Belgium I addressed to ———, a gentleman of great learning, and worthy of respect. But the things which will now be narrated by me, I will dedicate to you, my dearest Cornelins. For I know that you have endured and suffered much, and have lived much in foreign climes, and undergone very many peregrinations; that you have sailed to the cities situated on the shores of the Euxine, and have become acquainted with the manners of barbarians. And that you might also know something of those of northern and Atlantic countries, I thought I ought to relate these things to you, who are a person of such a character. For both to you and myself ancestrally hath been fated, if any such thing is, a life spent abroad. Wherefore with propriety I write to you these things, knowing you to be a person fond of listening and of being informed. And hence the occasion leads me to commence my narrative.

Being, then, in Calais, a town situated on the sea, as I stated, and preparing to cross over to the island, the royal passport was first obtained. And having gone on board ship straightway; at first we moved out of the harbour by rowing. And a gentle breeze blowing from land, low waves came rippling and smiling as it were under our stern. And it being now night, we being borne along by the tide, were accomplishing our voyage in smooth water. The master, however, gave orders to take in sail. And his reason for relaxing the speed of the vessel, now sailing with a favourable wind, we learnt to be this. Were he to allow the sail to be fully inflated, we should approach the island about the first watch, and there would be a fear of our grounding on shallows, which were for the most part close to rocky cliffs, the floods being then on the increase; he therefore said it was best for us to pass the night at sea, and receive the wind with slackened sail; that then, at dawn of day, as near as he could reckon, we might draw to land.

Thus indeed spake the master; but it fell not out as he conjectured.

But it being now midnight, a certain wind called the north wind having sprung up, the sea was suddenly ruffled; perhaps having undergone a change from the time of night, or this being produced by the mere will of fortune. The sound of the approaching storm was now heard; and instantly an impetuous and violent blast having thence fallen on us, it filled the sailors with unlooked-for consternation. Wherefore, indeed, every nautical resource was suddenly called forth by the accident. And having lost our sail, and not knowing whither we were carried, but cleaving the waters of the ocean, and being tossed by huge waves rapidly succeeding each other, and undergoing every species of danger, and being within a hair-breadth of sinking, we entertained but slender hopes of being saved.

And when the night was well nigh spent, towards day-break, we were driven involuntarily upon a certain shore, at the mouth of Nieuport haven, a city of Flanders. And having tarried in it three days, and as many nights, to shelter ourselves from the peril of the ocean, and when the agitation of the waters was even yet scarcely calmed, and a strong west-wind was blowing, we put to sea. And although a side-wind fell on us, yet however towards sun-set we reached the promontory of the island, and came to land in the harbour of Dover. Here is built a small town, full of inns; and a certain fort stands erected for the protection of the harbour.

Having therefore disembarked, and tarried one day in the inns, on the morrow, horses having been prepared for us, we mounted and proceeded on our journey to the King; and arrived in Greenwich, a village in the neighbourhood of London, the capital of England. Whereupon, having been presented to the King, who was at this time residing in his palace, Gerardus, the ambassador, laid before him the instructions he had received from the

And we, continuing still in Greenwich, on the fifth day removed to London. And having apartments somewhere near the royal palace, we awaited the King's final despatch of the affairs laid before him. Being then thus circumstanced, in order that I might not seem to have wasted the opportunity inconsiderately and idly, it appeared good to me to investigate the peculiarities of the island, and to ascertain, as far as lay in my power, the things appertaining to it.

The island itself, then, is said to be the greatest of those in the world, except Taprobane and Thule, by those who have formerly examined such matters, and to be triangular in shape. And that side which inclines towards the west and Spain, measures seven hundred miles. And that towards the south and the opposite coast of France, which also is called Kent, extends five hundred miles. And that towards the north and Germany, is estimated to be eight hundred miles. And on the coast it has several cities of note, and forts, and towns. And amongst the cities, indeed, which are conspicuous and celebrated, are Antonia and Bristol, Danebium and Dartenicum, and London, which surpasses these; and the palaces which are in it in beauty and magnitude excel the others. And a river flows through it, both great and navigable, having a very rapid current, for six hours flowing downwards, and again rising for six hours. For the ocean, augmented by the tide, drives the water upwards; but at the ebb, the current of the river, as is natural, follows the declivity. Similar alternations are wont to be effected in the streams of rivers by the ebb and flow of the ocean. And one may observe the current, after descending for a while, again return upwards. But on the ebbing of the water, the river again discharges itself into the sea. And the augmented tide rises to the height of fifteen cubits at the most. And a certain very large bridge is built, affording a passage to those in the city to the opposite inhabited bank, supported by stone cemented arches, and having also houses and turrets upon it. And one may see ferry boats and small barks, which are rowed with speed, plying in great numbers on the banks, for the accommodation of the city. But merchants' ships, which arrive in London from every country, ascend by the river to the city, and import wine and oil, and other articles of subsistence.

And throughout the city a large number of mansions are built for the residence of the nobles and merchants, and lofty halls ornamented with florid paintings, are erected. Also in some parts of the city, very large royal palaces, ornamented in a very high degree, and luxuriously furnished, and encircled by gardens and parks, are pre-eminent. And the whole city is paved with flint stones. And a certain castle, bearing the semblance of a citadel, very beautiful and strong, is built very near the river, having very many and large guns. Here the treasures and valuable property are deposited. For they are said to exceed the anciently famed wealth of Cræsus and Midas. So vast a quantity of gold and silver is treasured up there. And near to Greenwich they possess an arsenal with dock-yards, where they build ships ; it being close to the river. And in this city there dwell men from most of the nations of Europe, employed in various mercantile arts ; such especially as regard the working of iron and other metals, added to which they execute with surprising skill the weaving of woollen cloths, and richly embroidered tapestry.

Almost all, indeed, except the nobles, and those in attendance on the royal person, pursue mercantile concerns. And not only does this appertain to men, but it devolves in a very great extent upon women also. And to this, they are wonderfully addicted. And one may see in the markets and streets of the city married women and damsels employed in arts, and barterings and affairs of trade, undisguisedly. But they display great simplicity and absence of jealousy in their usages towards females. For not only do those who are of the same family and household kiss them on the mouth with salutations and embraces, but even those too who have never seen them. And to themselves this appears by no means indecent.

And London, in temples and public edifices, and baths, surpasses all the cities of England. And somewhere about the middle of the city a certain place is set apart, where there is daily an assemblage of merchants, from which there arise very extensive barterings and traffic.

And among themselves also they circulate what are called bills of exchange, which in Greek one would term enallagas. And it is something of this sort : when, for instance, any merchant arrives thither, having sold, perhaps, whatever merchandise belonged to him, but not wishing to keep the money in his pocket, from fear of the attacks of pirates on the voyage, or of robbers by land perhaps, he receives from the purchasers of his merchandise the above-mentioned bill of exchange. And it is a piece of paper not very large, exhibiting the amount of the estimated merchandise. And to whatever city of note in Europe he may wish to have remitted the bill of exchange, containing the name of the drawer, and of him who ought to pay the money, and likewise also of him who ought to receive it, on coming to him who ought to pay the money, and showing the written paper, straightway without hesitation he subscribes his name to the paper; and after eight days he advances the money without any dispute. And such bills of exchange are customary in almost all the most conspicuous of the cities of Europe; companies of merchants sending money through them

And ships arrive from every country, freighted with all kinds of merchandise; they import malmsey wine, for instance, from Crete; and they bring oil from Peloponnesus and Calabria, and a great quantity of provisions from Spain and France itself. And they exchange the imported cargo for woollen garments, which they call serges. For they carry abroad these garments throughout the whole world, exported, as one may see, from this island. And one may wonder at the great abundance of these; so many being imported into Europe, and Asia, and Africa, that there is no city or region destitute of such garments. And with these, as we said, the ships are freighted in exchange. And not only so, but also with what is called white lead, differing but little in appearance from silver, and which is, as miners know, the most beautiful of substances excavated throughout the

And no small revenue accrues to the King from this; and the white lead, which is called cassitërus; but in the Italian language it is called stangōn (stanmo).

And the city is in the highest degree well regulated under the King and the other authorities, by regal and private laws. Wherefore also they pay to their King the greatest obedience. And they possess a peculiar language, differing in some measure from all others, having received contributions from almost all the rest, both in words and syllables, as I conjecture. For although they speak somewhat barbarously, yet their language has a certain charm and allurements, being sweeter indeed than that of the Germans and Flemish. And in feasts and drinkings, and in pledgings of health and carousals, they differ in nothing from the French. And their nobles and rulers, and those in authority, are replete with benevolence and good order, and are courteous to strangers. But the rabble and the mob are as it were turbulent and barbarous in their manner, as I have observed from experience and intercourse. And towards the Germans and Flemish and Italians, and the Spanish also, they are friendly disposed. But towards the French they entertain not one kindly sentiment of good will; but from some natural disposition, being very hostilely disposed, they are animated towards them with private and public feelings of enmity. Hence, too, some few only of the French merchants reside in the island, both because their Kings, frequently without proclamation, wage on each other no trivial war, and it being doubtful if their

The King seldom takes up his abode in the cities of note, but near smaller towns and other places, where palaces stand for the reception of himself and the grandees of his court; and in these he passes the greatest part of his time. And the whole body of life guards, and all his retinue, and the whole suite of grandees, and chief of the privy council, he always lodges in the court; changing these daily, as is expedient, and receiving others of like stations, for the administration of affairs pertaining to his government. And in London he appoints those called Prefects and Administrators, who manage the affairs of the city. No sentence, however, inflicting capital punishment or loss of limbs, do they execute without the King's sanction. And his consort and children he provides for in the

The race of men indeed is fair, inclining to a light colour; in their persons they are tall and erect; the hair of their beard and head is of a golden hue; their eyes blue, for the most part, and their cheeks are ruddy; they are martial and valorous, and generally tall; flesh-eaters, and insatiable of animal food; sottish and unrestrained in their appetites; full of suspicion. But towards their King they are wonderfully well affected; nor would any one of them endure hearing any thing disrespectful of the King, through the honour they bear him; so that the most binding oath which is taken by them is that by which "the King's life" has been pledged.

wards the continent is named England, and the cities in it English cities. But the western portion is called Scotland. And there is a considerable river called the Tweed, and it separates England from Scotland. And England possesses its own King; and Scotland itself likewise appoints a King from among its own people. And ever as it were these Kings, being inimical, perpetually fighting about the limits of their country, cruelly destroy each other in a kind of barbarous and savage warfare. And on the banks of the Tweed certain forts have been built, for protection of the boundaries. And that portion of Scotland is somewhat northern, hence also cold; yet fruitful in wheat, and abounding in animals common with us. They have also cities renowned and large, where is the royal residence and government, no way inferior to that of England. And here also commercial transactions take place; and ships arrive from the continent. And towards the French they are friendly disposed; but they are most hostilely bent against the English. And being tributary to the English, they have often stirred up war, to free themselves from the tribute; but they have been unsuccessful, since the English kept them down by superior skill in war and force. For the Scotch are a more barbarous people in their manner of living than the English. But they possess a soil as favourable to fruit and corn as that of the English; since being continuous, it is only divided by the river Tweed.

And the whole island is diversified with fruitful hills and plains, and abounds with marshes and well-timbered oak forests; it has moreover woods and lakes near the sea. For the greatest portion of the country of the Britons, laved continuously by the ebb and flow of the ocean, is marshy; from the exhalation and denseness of which, the atmosphere throughout that portion appears for the most part misty. Whence, as the waters flow and ebb, it accumulates a certain slimy deposit, in maritime places, from which the exhalations are drawn. There are also fountains and springs of sweet water, in great abundance. And it breeds in the marshes, of wild and carnivorous animals, bears and hogs, besides the wolf and the fox; and of graminivorous animals, stags and hares, and others of the same sort. Also of such as are tame and domesticated with us, there are almost too many to be enumerated; so many horses, and those of noble breed too, and so many oxen, and so many flocks of sheep, that wonder arises in the beholders, on account of the multitude of them. Nor in truth is there any shepherd placed over the sheep to tend them, neither indeed a herdsman over the oxen; but wherever the animals may be whilst feeding, on the second perhaps, or even the third day, they return to their owner's house. Yet no one dares to steal any of them; since the extreme punishment of death awaits the perpetrator. But that each man may know his own, they smear some mark on the skin with some native pitch. abound in butter and cheese and milk. And the horses are naturally swift-footed and very fleet, and for the more part white. But they are deficient in the breeds of asses and mules; for this latter animal is not produced in colder regions. Hence indeed, also, rarely do horns grow upon oxen and sheep. And they have generous hunting and house dogs, so that they frequently send these against bears and wild boars. Both morasses and oak forests favourable for hunting, abound throughout the island. They lack, however, the vine, which produces wine; also the olive-tree, and the fig-tree, and other trees indigenous to warmer climates; but of other cultured and fruit-bearing trees they possess an abundant supply. And marble and smooth rocks, such as those very solid ones with us, they have not; but certain porous and terreous stones; wherefore also they are easily obtained, and easily polished. But the stone used for fire and black, is found in most places. They are rich in mines of metals, and of metallic substances of all kinds; they have not, however, much gold, but very much silver, and of tin, and of what is called white lead, called also stagōn (stanno); and of common lead; and of liquid and terreous pitch; and, moreover, of sulphur and nitre in vast quantities, and in some districts, other fossils of the hotter kinds are excavated.

The island being such, lacks nothing of the things that are necessary and profitable, and useful to men. Nay, even things apparently scarce, are easily to be procured, and at little cost. And the length of the day in the summer season, in England, extends to nineteen hours; and that of the night reaches to five. And in Scotland, that of the day extends to twenty hours, and that of the night to four. And not only so, but neither is the night itself so dark as with us; but the night is of such a kind, as the twilight produced in the interval betwixt day and night, so that one often sees even the minutest objects. Such, indeed, is the case with the regions which are situated towards the west. And the reason of this is, the privation of the sun's ray from the northern parts. On this account these regions are also cold, as the warmth of the sun is present in a very limited measure; and from its distance, congelations and snows almost perpetually succeed each other. But the rains are not apt to be very impetuous, as the west wind disperses the watery clouds of the south, and opposes their further progress.

And there is also a certain other island, called Hibernia, and Ireland as well, large and populous. For it measures six hundred miles; being not further distant towards the south than 35 miles from the island of the English. It possesses towns and cities. But the inhabitants reject political institutions, and other importations, with whatever else pertains to them.

And it is no long time since it has been reduced under subjection to the King of England ; and from him it receives its administration. And respecting the island itself, they related to me certain strange and marvellous tales. They fabulously tell that Hades and the gates of Hades are there, imagining that they hear the groans of men undergoing punishment ; and they add, moreover, that various spectres and adverse powers are seen ; and they further tell of perfumed springs, and of milky water ; and other things equally nonsensical, which I have omitted as fabulous and trifling. Such things then as appeared to me to be true, and susceptible of sober consideration, these I relate. The island Hibernia, then, is of a fruitful nature, and yields corn, and furnishes animals of all kinds ; and whatever things are in England and Scotland, in none of these is it inferior. But yet they do not pay so much attention to civil polity. As many, indeed, as live in cities and walled towns have something of human polity and administration. But such, on the other hand, as live in forests and bogs are entirely wild and savage; and there remains only the human form, whereby they may be distinguished to be men. They are tall, fair-complexioned, and rather light haired; wearing much hair on their heads, and having a shaggy beard. They go at all seasons without any other clothing than that which covers their loins. And neither heat nor cold annoys or enfeebles them. But they devote themselves to archery, and practise running with excessive endurance, so as frequently to contend in speed with horses and hunting dogs. And they gird on their thigh a barbaric sword, not very long, and in their left hand they carry certain javelins. And they throw with so good an aim, that their skill in hitting the mark is by many thought to be marvellous. They wear neither covering on their heads nor shoes to their feet; are swift of foot, and engage in battle hand

And as many of them as appear to live in a more civilized manner, having sewed together vestments of linen and hemp of all colours, clothe themselves in garments extending to their feet, and made after a barbaric fashion. And their wives also are accustomed to wear something of the same kind. And towards their own females they conduct themselves with too great simplicity, inasmuch as sometimes they have sexual intercourse with them in public; neither does this appear to themselves shameful. They feed on every thing, and gorge themselves to excess with flesh. They are continually eating milk and butter. And if the King of England need their service, they are able to muster to the number of ten thousand or even more. And the men, being valourous in feats of war, have frequently acquired renown. These then are the particulars known to me respecting these men. And the island itself also is similarly circumstanced with England; for it is washed also by the ebb and flow of the ocean. Also the

And there are also some other islands, not very large, lying in a cluster, which are called Orcades, not inhabited, save one, or perhaps even two. And there is one other, called Prote, where stands a city and harbour. And these islands in the aggregate they call absolutely Britannic, as having been formerly subject to the people of Britany in France, who sent a colony, and peopled the islands. But the names were altered by those of later ages, according to circumstances; and one is called England, and another Scotland, and another Hibernia, and in like manner the rest. All, then, have hills and plains, and mountains that are low, and shaped like mounds, and not greatly elevated; they have also marshes, and oak-forests of fine timber. And they are exposed in the winter season to severe colds and frosts, also to snows and snow-showers, through proximity to the north.

The climate, however, is mild and healthy, as the noxiousness of the air is rectified by the cold. These, then, are the particulars which have been related regarding the island, the excellence of the soil, and the character of the people.

I have not yet spoken of what pertains to the sea. But it were absurd, if, after having handled with more than ordinary minuteness the things on land, those which are more particularly wonderful in the sea should be left unnoticed. Begin we then; that those who are fond of hearing, may be able to know the productions of the ocean, which are of a strange and unusual nature, as regards ourselves. This, then, which is commonly styled and is in fact the greatest sea, and which is also called the ocean, is of boundless extent, and hardly known. Wherefore, also, by the ancients it was termed Unnavigable, according to the proverb, which says; “What lies beyond Gadira is unnavigable.” This sea, then, although much celebrated for greatness, is nevertheless now traversed by ordinary vessels, and they enter it with perfect indifference. And in this sea huge whales are reported to swim, monstrous in their shapes, and savage. And some are of such a size, as to equal in length the largest ships, and probably even galleys. These while swimming spout water into the air, through a certain orifice in their head, and throw it to a great height. These (cete) whales they term, in the language of the country, balenæ. And among others I saw also a certain animal, having the head and ears of a hog, and four feet. It had not, however, hoofs cloven, but broad, rounded in the extremities; scaly, and with the tail of a fish; the spine bony, thick set with very sharp prickles of a red and black colour, and long, perhaps two cubits; and they call these swine-fish, for they eat of them as well as of the other fishes.

And in addition to these, there is another kind of fish, not very large, which being caught alive, they salt; and the salted fish they dispose of to the neighbouring cities. And no one would taste of them before he has hammered them on an anvil; but having removed the roughness by pounding, they boil it in an earthen vessel over the fire with water, whereby it becomes also palatable. This they season in various ways; and the fish is called dart. And I saw another kind of fish, winged in the same manner as birds, having a beak and feet like a duck. For the beak is pointed; not greater in length than a dove. These the fishermen affirm, that they draw up from the rocks in the recesses of the sea by nets and other modes of capture. And the animal being killed there in the water, the blood loses its crimson hue, and becomes of the colour of water. These things, indeed, the fishermen stated; but to me they seemed incredible. And these animals they eat as fish on fast days without scruple. And they have no voice, but only croak with volubility. These things truly, and others of the same kind, I have learnt. But, in order that I may not seem to you to relate fables, and to detail things marvellous with reference to ourselves, I will dismiss these things. Those however know who have seen them. They have also the like kinds of fish as those with us in great abundance, both cartilaginous and testaceous fish, and similar oysters; of these the whole coast produces a plentiful supply. And of eels and congers, and such like, it furnishes also vast quantities. And with respect to these, indeed, I speak as I have had experience.

And the sea, when the wind blows, raises a vast wave, and it swells to such a degree as to seem to reach the sky. Wherefore it strikes the greatest terror in beholders. But the waves are not broken, nor, indeed, produce a sound, but move along quietly and noiselessly, and carry the ships along with them. Hence truly is it also braved with indifference by such as have had experience of it. For the ships which come from the Mediterranean sea must needs pass out by Cadiz and the narrow strait are said to be five hundred miles. So that from Cadiz to London there are one thousand eight hundred and fifty Italian miles. This is the length of the voyage which he will have to perform, who intends going by sea from the Mediterranean to the British islands. And to one desirous of going from London to Antwerp, there are one hundred and forty miles to the mouth of the river; and sixty from the mouth of the river to the city. So that the whole distance from London to Antwerp is two hundred miles. Thus much then has been said respecting this part of the ocean.

I will now proceed to speak of the reigning sovereign called Henry, the eighth of this name, having first premised a few brief particulars, which, being connected with the monarchs which preceded him, seem of most importance, and especially deserving of attention. The kings of England, then, appear from ancient times to have regulated, in a surprising manner, the forms and institutions of the Christian religion; and to have exhibited great reverence for the church, and obedience to the decrees of the Roman Pontiff. Hence, too, both the Roman Pontiff received from them annually no small revenue; and to such an extent was veneration for the clerical order carried with them, that nearly the largest portion of the island was assigned to the clergy, and the greatest part of the revenues were paid to them. Whence one may see a multitude of monasteries, and of very large churches, throughout the whole island, both in the cities and rural districts. And the resources of the clerical order were so greatly augmented, that they frequently domineered over the citizens; and sometimes, too, contemptuously treated their kings. For those among them called Abbots, that is, the rulers of wealthy monasteries, would not have been supposed, by those who beheld them, to be monks, but distinguished noblemen, and perhaps sovereign princes, so great was the retinue and display of horses and mules which attended upon them. Whence they oftentimes contended, even against their own kings. And on one occasion, when one of these sovereigns had devised how to repress these things, and had wished to order them in a more becoming manner, they deprived him of life by a violent death. And the circumstances of the action were as follows: The King then being on a hunting excursion, and having been left alone, as is wont to happen on such occasions, and having obtained some rest from his toils, tied his horse by the bridle to a shady tree; and having stretched himself on the grass, fell asleep. And two of those of the fraternity of such as are called monks, from a certain monastery which happened to be somewhere close by, accidentally came upon the monarch while asleep. And having discovered who he was, they proceeded to their principal, and made known to him the particulars respecting the King. And he, without hesitation, despatched two of the boldest of the fraternity with bows and arrows, having given them injunctions, that they should deprive the King of life by whatever means they were able, as calumniating their mode of life. These, therefore, set off in all haste and dispatch, and slew with their arrows the monarch while asleep, and returned to their principal to report to him the issue of their enterprise. No long time having intervened, some of the King's attendants, seeking him, discovered him still breathing. And being unable to find out who were the perpetrators of this deed, they removed the dead body of the King to London; and having consigned it to the tomb, they appointed his son to reign in his stead.

And after a rapid succession of two or three sovereigns, another having obtained the kingdom, and he being jealous of the power of the clergy, they accomplished his death in a similar manner. For he also happened to be hunting in one of the marshy districts near to a certain monastery.

And the King, from heat and weariness, being oppressed with thirst, was unable to restrain himself. Hence also having proceeded to the monks, he requested of them water to drink ; but they gave to him wine drugged with deadly poison. And in order that the King might taste of the draught without hesitation or suspicion, the person who ministered this, according to custom, drank before him ; regardless of his own life, provided he might compass also the death of the King ; whence also he lay outstretched a corpse. And shortly after, the King himself also, being seized with giddiness and vomitings, expired in violent convulsions. But his attendants having become aware of the transaction, consigned the monastery to the flames, together with the monks, and all those found with them. Some such judgment befel these. And, in addition to these, again also by treachery they removed from life another, and subsequently another, by some other mode of death. And to such a degree was the influence of the clergy extended, that they wholly disregarded both the royal statutes and their own ordinances.

Henry, therefore, of whom I was speaking, having obtained the kingdom, and being of an energetic and spirited character, established the concerns of the monarchy on a better footing. For having come into possession of the throne of his ancestors, and having settled his administration, he took to himself for consort the maternal aunt of the Emperor, whence also he was acknowledged the father of a daughter by her. From her, while still living, he separated; giving out, that it is unlawful for Christians to cohabit with those of kin; for he happened to be a near relation of the Queen. Wherefore, indeed, he put her away; and married another, the daughter of one of the nobles of the island. His former consort, therefore, had recourse to the Roman Pontiff, demanding justice, and complaining of the proceedings of her husband. Hence the Pontiff sent to him legates, with injunctions that he should receive again his repudiated consort, and should dismiss the other as unlawfully cohabiting with him; and if not, he would subject him to excommunication. And these injunctions did the Roman Pontiff send to Henry King of England. But Henry, without delay, refers the matters affecting him to the doctors of the faculty of theology in Paris, and awaited their decision. And these, therefore, after many meetings and disputations, objections proposed and solved, decreed respecting the marriage of Henry, that he did lawfully cohabit with the second of his consorts. But the Roman Pontiff, desirous of gratifying the Emperor, as it is said, by no means acceded; but subjected him to the ban of excommunication. And again, Henry having stated his case to the theologians in Louvain and Cologne, these gave no decision, indeed, but, placed the suit in abeyance, and delayed their answer. Hence Henry sent to the Pope of Rome, requesting absolution from the ban; but he was unsuccessful in his application to the Pontiff. And therefore Henry, perceiving the manifest indignation of the Roman Pontiff towards him, and that he neither accepted the atonement he offered, nor granted absolution from the ban, which he sought, having called together his ministers, not only those in authority, but now also the heads of the clergy; and an assembly having taken place, he addressed them as follows:

“The having called and convened you promiscuously, most reverend Sirs, and you my friends and counsellors, will appear strange and unusual. And yet, since the urgency of affairs now demands this, it will be deemed neither strange nor novel, but at this time both agreeable to the usage of our country and necessary for us. Ye know this, indeed, by the excommunication issued by the Roman Pontiff against us, and his unjust exclusion of us from the Catholic Church. I know not with what intentions he has devised these things against us. And often, as ye know, I have sent to him both ambassadors and letters, setting forth my case; how it is improper to have further commerce with the woman formerly dwelling with

The Pontiff, however, neither yields to the decisions of the theologians in Paris, nor yet to the justice of our requests; but, favouring certain parties in regard to these things, he shews himself unjust towards us. And these things indeed ye yourselves also know. But the mandate recently issued by him, enjoining our priests to bury no one of those who die, nor to perform sacred rites, nor to follow the ceremonies of our ritual, nor to join in marriage those who desire it; and, in a word, to tear us in a manner far away from the sanctity and faith of Christians, both tends to place us in the same lot with atheists, infidels, and homicides, and seeks to remove us altogether from Christianity. For he does not, as he himself pretends, hold in his hands the keys of faith, nor can he open the door to whom he pleases, and again close it to others to whom he is unfavourable; but all have partaken of grace; and the saving preaching of our faith has been disseminated amongst the whole race of mankind, throughout almost all the world, by the warning of the Apostles, by evangelical piety, and by the outpouring of the spirit. And mankind, having tasted the nectar of the knowledge of God, have both shaken off infidelity, and have exchanged the bitter and soul-destroying potion of idolatrous and demoniacal infatuation for the delicious one of faith. Not that I would recommend you to withdraw wantonly from the Church of Christ; God forbid! no, indeed, but from the violent and unreasonable authority of the Roman Pontiff. And I wish to establish firmly our own churches and rites, and the bloodless sacrifices and the holy assemblies, and the other ecclesiastical observances handed down to us; and in these very same to abide and acquiesce to the end of my life, both I and the people given in charge to me by God. The King having delivered this harangue, all, except a certain few, decreed to separate themselves from the domination of the Roman Pontiff; and charged the Bishops of the provinces to adhere to what had been decreed. And it is said, that he did these things by the advice of his consort, for she happened to be stored with general learning, and those sciences common to us, and subtle in arguing ; but yet, as it appeared, reprehensible in conduct, since, with the connivance of her mother, she had an illicit intercourse with her own brother, through a desire of having children, as she had none from Henry. Wherefore, indeed, he hastened, after a judicial trial, to pass judgment on their conduct. And, indeed, having caused them to be led, together with their mother, into the assembly of peers and nobles, in the hearing of all he thus addressed his consort: “O woman! what demon has goaded you on to this pitch of madness, so as to have commerce with your own brother, a deed exceeding in criminality that of all women we have ever heard of? From what motive could you bring yourself to be a partaker in so abominable a crime? one that is astounding to the hearer, and still more astounding to the beholder! And how do you think that this can be well for me and you, as regards our marriage?” She replied as follows: “That I have thus acted towards your bed, my Lord, I can no longer deny; but acknowledge that these things are true. For the crime, being very great, does not admit of defence. I am convicted of being incestuous, and an adulteress.

But spare my brother, he being in no wise to blame in this. And towards my mother, ordain what is humane in your eyes.” And these words, indeed, spake the Queen. And all shedding tears, and admiring the Queen’s affection for her brother, stood for a long time without uttering a word. Nevertheless the King commanded them to be decapitated; not those only who had done the act, but also those accessory to it. Such a judgment overtook the Queen and those about her. For the King happened to be lovingly disposed towards her, therefore also he condemned her to suffer no other mode of death than by the sword.

And no long time intervening, the King took to himself a third wife, the daughter of a certain nobleman belonging to the island; and having consummated the nuptials, passed his time in festivity and recreation. For the first wife of this King happened to die in Spain. Wherefore, indeed, he took to himself a consort who was born in the island. And having been acknowledged the parent of a son, he was bereft of his spouse. For in giving birth to the child, she was not able to sustain the pangs; and by some fatality she thus ended her life. And the King having sumptuously interred her, took to himself a fourth consort. And this one, indeed, was esteemed the most beautiful of all the women of her time; but having fallen in love with some noble youth of the court, she defiled herself with him. And Henry having learned the particulars respecting her, and caught them in the very act, commanded their heads to be cut off, with those of the accessories to their passion. And these things the King having done, proceeded to take to him a fifth consort, one who was sister of the Prince of Gelderland, of the country of the Germans, a masculine woman, and of great beauty. But when he had cohabited with her, and some time had elapsed, he repudiated her also. And the reason was said to be of this kind. For it has been customary with the Germans to affiancè their damsels. And the person who affiancèd them, approaching the damsel, was wont to place his thigh, not indeed naked, near to the thigh of the affiancèd, as forming the contract, forsooth, in the sight of all. This, then, is with them the mode of affiancè. Now she herself had chanced long before to have undergone a ceremony of this kind with one of the German nobles; whom Henry then repudiated, as having been affiancèd to another: however, he did not divest her of regal honours,

And Henry took to himself a sixth wife, in other respects not unpleasing, but already past her prime, and forty years of age, and besides, having been before the wife of two husbands, but separated from them by death, and living in widowhood; her did Henry take to himself as a discreet and suitable partner. And these things we know to have befallen Henry, not altogether prosperously indeed, respecting his wives. And from some of these he was blessed with offspring: from the first he was acknowledged the father of a daughter, from the third of a son. And he expects to leave him the successor to his kingdom.

Extend we then, if it seems good to you, our narrative even to the other acquisitions of power made by this king, which are deserving of mention, and requiring to be handed down, and which the preceding sovereigns of England were unable to exhibit. For in my former account respecting the clergy, I stated both the power which they had acquired, and their ostentatious display, so that they treated even their own sovereigns with contempt: and to such a degree had they familiarised themselves with vice, that they contemned enactments and injunctions both divine and human; and more especially those monks who termed themselves followers of Francis. For this fraternity had so greatly increased, that the aggregate of their order exceeded all the rest. Hence, indeed, from their numbers, they proceeded to transgressions; and having devised jests in matters which are not fit subjects for jest, they paved the way for their own downfall, and that of many others. For it was said, that, together with other numberless theatrical representations, which they foolishly acted for the sake of base gain, they ventured also on the following trick. Having made a cross of silver, and the incarnate God Jesus nailed to it, of large size, and having marked the time in which the cross had been made, that is, having engraved on it, that it had been made a thousand years before, they concealed it in some cave situate in a certain woody glen fit for their purpose. And from some artificial fire having prepared a light, they put it in a glass vessel, so that it presented to those not in the secret the appearance of a supernatural fire; and having placed this in front of the cross, they withdrew, having artfully closed up the mouth of the cave, that they might not incur suspicion from any one. And after a few days, they spread a report over the whole island, that there had been revealed to a certain old man of their own order, celebrated for the strictness of his ascetic discipline, and living in solitude, some salutary treasure, a charm for dispelling the infirmities of soul and body. But the spot pointed out by a divine messenger to the wondrous old man, was (represented) as solitary and difficult of access. It was, therefore, requisite, with prayer and supplication, to proceed and perform there the hallowed rites; then perhaps also they would thus obtain the object of their wishes. When then these things had been noised abroad, and great numbers were superstitiously intent on such things, they went to the chiefs of the Franciscan order, entreating them to point out to them the treasure revealed by God. And these, indeed, pretending to be ignorant, and setting little store by themselves, calling themselves unworthy, and not meet to receive so great a favour, spake with dissimulation. But the others desisted not ; but with lamentations and tears persevered in their importunity, until at last they moved them to compassion. And having taken the old man, with the greatest reverence and devotion, singing psalms, and forming themselves in a procession two by two, they followed the old man. And a multitude of men, of all ages, not only of the rabble, but now also of persons in authority, and of some of the senate, followed these ; and with deep contrition each prayed. And having then at length come to the place, and reverently performed initiatory rites, the wondrous old man, having taken a spade, with tears commenced to delve. And having ordered the others also to do this, they took part in the labour. Having descended then as much as an ell, a sudden light broke forth. And feigning that their eyes were dazzled, they remained speechless. And whereas others did not venture to approach, the old man exhorted these. But some of the bolder sort having drawn near, began to shout and to chaunt: “We praise thee, O God!” and so forth. But when they brought up the cross from the recesses of the earth, and they beheld the miraculous fire, there was no one but went away wondering; and with pious veneration glorified God. Thence, too, was a mingled noise of persons lamenting, shouting, lauding, rejoicing, and of some saying that divine grace had visited them, and performing other things, to which a multitude, full of superstition, is readily excited. And now having, somewhat late in the evening, retired to their own monastery, they set up the cross in a conspicuous place, previously held in veneration. And what followed? Pious pilgrimages of numberless persons to the cross; confessions of sins, both of men and women. And there was contrived also something of this nature; for when these disclosed their sins, those who received their confessions, and were also called Ghostly Fathers, sent them away to the cross, with the view of entreating remission of sins and plenary absolution. These, therefore, arriving, kneeling down, and pouring forth tears, as many as placed gold, or any thing else of considerable value, at the feet of the image on the cross, obtained pardon and remission; for the image on the cross signified assent by nodding its head. But, on the other hand, those who brought insufficient gold, by no means obtained remission; the image intimating this also. And the contrivance was said to be something of the following kind. The image, then, representing Jesus, by means of cer-

Οἱ οὖν ὀρώντες τὸ παράδοξον τῆς θαυματοποιίας ἐκπληττόμενοι χρυσὸν ἔφερον, καὶ τὰ τιμιώτερα προσετίθουν, ποτινιώμενοι, καὶ τὸν θεὸν ἐξευμενίζοντες, καὶ λύσιν τῶν σφίσι πλημμεληθέντων τῇ κατακλίσει τῆς τοῦ ἐν τῷ σταυρῷ ἀνδριάντος κεφαλῆς λαμβάνοντες, ἀγνοοῦντες τῆς σκευωρουμένης ἔνδον τοῦ ἀνδριάντος τῶν μοναχῶν πανουργίας. tain flexible vertebræ and slender cords, was made to bend, and to erect both the head and the parts about the neck. Whence those appointed to attend to this, when, as I said, they saw gold, the image as it were approving and accepting, they made it to bow its head. But when, on the other hand, those who approached made but a trifling offering, the image as it were not approving the gift, they made the head to revolve hither and thither. Those, therefore, who saw the strangeness of the prodigy, being struck with awe, brought gold, and offered besides whatever was most precious, suppliantly venerating and propitiating God, and receiving remission of their trespasses by the bowing of the head of the image on the cross, being ignorant of the imposture so craftily contrived within the statue by the monks. And these things, therefore, were noised abroad throughout all the island of England; and heralds were despatched to make the transaction publicly known. Hence, indeed, the superstitious multitude of men piled up gold and silver for the monks. But in order that truth at last might be made manifest, and imposture might be unmasked, something of the following kind is said to have taken place. The artist who had contrived the cross arrived in London from Antwerp, for the monks had caused it to be fabricated there. And having heard the rumours about the cross, came also with others for the purpose of venerating the image and honouring the deity. Having, therefore, come, as he gazed on the cross, he began to form conjectures, suspecting that the cross was the work of his own hand. Whence having very long and minutely examined it, he became sufficiently assured that the workmanship was his own; whereon, indeed, he made a disclosure to some of those about him. And they themselves having communicated the saying to others, the report became so extensively circulated, that it reached the ears of the king himself. And he without delay summoned the image maker from Antwerp into his presence. When, therefore, he was come, and had been questioned, and had pointed out the person sent to Antwerp by the monks of the fraternity, to give him the orders for executing the cross, the King obtained full and satisfactory evidence. Whence, having caused the monk to be stretched out on the rack, and put to the torture, he confessed all the things which had been devised by the monks. The King, therefore, having apprehended all these, shut them up in prison ; and, shortly after, he deprived their chiefs of life by hanging, but the rest he decapitated with the sword ; and others also having driven from the island, he condemned to perpetual banishment. And the miraculous image, with the collected riches, he assigned to the royal treasury ; and the monastery he razed to the very foundation. And these things, indeed, thus fell out. But I will now proceed to state in writing what was contrived by the monks in this place, not less artfully than what was abovementioned ; for it was said, that some of these, who are also called ghostly fathers, having found a certain woman pretending to lead an ascetic life, and having no mean reputation, as one may say, over all England, whom all revered as holy,—for she was said not to taste at all of nutriment; but partaking daily of the presented offerings of the bloodless sacrifice, she gave out that she was both preserved alive and sustained; whence also she obtained the title of Saint, and all looked upon her as miraculous. Some of the monks, therefore, as I have said, having found out this old woman, and having communicated with her respecting the things to be done by them, and made arrangements, went away. And the thing devised was of the following kind. When those who made confession of their sins to the ghostly fathers, asked for remission of their offences, these put them off, alleging that they could not, through their magnitude, remit them; but that they must go to the most holy woman, and entreat of her, as being full of the Holy Ghost, the remission of their transgressions. And these therefore, went away, hoping to obtain mercy from the old woman as from the Deity; but before these arrived, the ghostly fathers went to the old woman by night, and disclosed to her all the offences of those who had made confession. They communicated to the old woman in writing the name and appearance, and occupation and age of each one individually. They, therefore, having arrived, and propitiating the woman, bought from her the remission of their sins forsooth; but before they confessed their transgressions, the old woman, to their astonishment, disclosed them all. And these, therefore, hearing this, and being quite amazed, imagined that the old woman was more than human. Whence, indeed, they fell prostrate at the old woman's feet, saying with lamentations, “And what must we do?” And the old woman constrained them to acts of beneficence to the monks, saying, that nothing was wont to propitiate the Deity so much as the conferring benefits on monks, and bestowing on them monies and other possessions; since, day and night they held intercourse with God, and exhibited upon earth an angelic mode of life. Hearing, therefore, these things, they gratified the monks with riches by heaps. And these, therefore, further communicated with the old woman; and they treasured up daily a multitude of riches, until, indeed, justice condemned them also with a righteous judgment. For when all supposed the old woman to be some one supernatural and miraculous, it chanced that a certain enterprising man suspected the imposture; for he also had disclosed to one of the ghostly fathers, as was natural, his own secret sins. And, like the rest, having been also sent to the old woman, he also heard his own transgressions recited by the old woman; whence he was busily engaged in forming conjectures. And having racked them with intolerable tortures, and brought to light the mummeries contrived by them, he consumed with fire the old woman. And he condemned the spiritual fathers to terminate their life by hanging. Wherefore these, and other things more than these, being what were daily practised by the monks, deprived all, or the most part, of the veneration and credit wont to be paid to them. Hence, indeed, also abominating them for their wicked course of life, in nothing did they look upon them with kindly feelings. And not only were they detected in these absurdities, but, moreover, they fell into most shameful lewdnesses of whorish and adulterous criminalities, natural and unnatural; so that there is no vice interdicted, and strange among us, with which they were not

Wherefore King Henry, seeing the abandoned life of the monks, and that with them piety was turned into mockery; and seeing also the number of their most shameful vices; and abominating their intolerable and arrogant superciliousness; and apprehending also some revolutionary movement from the multitude of these men, and watching the occasion that he might inflict just punishment on them, he summoned the members of his council, and, an assembly having been convened, he addressed them as follows: “Councillors and peers of my empire, some of you will, perhaps, wonder at my having thus unwontedly and unexpectedly summoned you, and that I have called you together on public business in the winter season, and during such a frost; when, however, ye have heard the reason for which I have summoned you, ye will probably applaud our foresight.  that has befallen us knows no change either of season or time; but rather increases in winter and spring, and has no thoughts of intermission. For it causes no ordinary inundation; nay, one so great that the only hope of the kingdom which was left to us, this it hastens to overwhelm. And what then is the storm? and who is he that raises it? Not even to you, per-who are called monks; how it having been devised by these of old, in order that men might live upon earth a mode of life like unto that of angels, on what principles of sublime polity, and divine elevation of the mind, and contempt of the world and the things of the world, and inspired wisdom dwelling in the heart, it has been most excellently ordained, and agreeably participated in it; but to so great a degree has it daily declined, through those who abuse things honourable, and to such a depth has it sunk, that it not only gives offence to considerate men, but now also at times justly incenses against us the all-seeing eye, and is leading the multitude into disorders of no ordinary kind. Our predecessors, indeed, without considera- tion, and somewhat weakly, from pious motives, and inclining to supersti- tion, bestowed on them their possessions. And these, therefore, excited by wealth and luxury, have changed every thing of heavenly polity and ordinance to what appeared to themselves gainful; and in the place of frugality has arisen sumptuousness; in the place of poverty, riches; in the place of fasting, luxury; in the place of chastity, lasciviousness; and in stead of humility, wrath and vain-glory and haughtiness; and other things, of which neither ye perhaps are ignorant; so that a person might more easily eye the sun with steadfast gaze than look these men in the face.

And being such as I have described, they trample on divine ordinances, and despise regal enactments, and the dogmas of sainted men they do not even wish to listen to ; in disposition self-directed and self-willed ; and neither, indeed, to God, nor yet to man, are they submissive. But under pretence of piety, they affect a certain simplicity in their attire as well as peculiar distinctions, and having formed themselves into fraternities and congregations, pretending forsooth to imitate the life of their chief, they deceive the simple-minded by the garb they assume, and pretend that those things which are supplied to them by others are bestowed by themselves on the needy. Hence, indeed, on this account they have made mendicants and beggars the more numerous. And some of them desire to be followers of Francis and others of Augustine, and some again of Dominic, and others have denominated themselves in various ways. And there is no one who is ignorant of the things audaciously done by them every day; the seductions and rapes of virgins, the insults offered to youths, the deeds of unnatural lewdness. And being detected in most shameful practices, they appeal to the Bishop of Rome; and loudly claiming for themselves a sanctity, which to invade were sacrilege, they are ready to commit to him judicial proceedings. How many of the monks, by night and by day, they keep locked up in their cells? And how many embryos they cast into the streams of rivers? And again, how many others most immaturely they destroy in the mother's womb by drugs which cause abortion, in order that they may not reveal to the world their secret crimes? I have done, however, with their practices, which are both many, and not unobserved by the generality of men. Wherefore, O, Sirs! And it is proper to abridge also these of their revenues, lest they also grow wanton through too much luxury. And the things pertaining to Christian discipline and ordinance shall be performed by the ministers and the presbyters; and the things which are salutary, and precepts that tend to salvation and the souls' health, shall by them be taught to the people; but the pestilent and pernicious we would send far away from our dominions. These things, therefore, O Sirs and Councillors! I lay before you, esteeming them to be for our advantage. And ye, as being both considerate and sapient, will choose what is best;

When the King had thus spoken, both the senate and those in authority, by vote and decree of every kind, expelled from the country of the English and from Ireland the whole order of monks and nuns, and regulated the affairs of the whole country by statutes. And one might see the societies of monks and nuns, some, indeed, accommodating themselves to the life of secular persons; and others taking to themselves wives lawfully wedded ; and others again, removing their abodes into Scotland, or in the adjoining countries of Flanders and France. and nuns as chose to live a virtuous life, to them were abundantly assigned what was requisite for their subsistence from the public treasury, without, however, any peculiarity of monastic dress. Moreover they ordained, that there should be buildings for the reception of strangers, and for the aged, and for the sick, and for maidens. And they appointed presbyters to serve the churches; and having also limited these in superfluities, there was assigned whatever was necessary for their maintenance, and not for luxury. These things, therefore, Henry King of England established; and enacted a law, that monks should no more in future set foot in England.

It is proper also to relate, what pertains to Thomas, formerly Bishop of London, and canonised as a saint by the Roman Pontiff, who ordained annual honours to be performed, both rites and sacred orations, as being one of the distinguished saints. For this Thomas, commonly known by the surname "of Canterbury," was said to be of the nobly descended of Wherefore the Roman Pontiff, having been greatly offended, conferred honours on Thomas, and by a decree of the church declared him to be a saint and hero, and enjoined that annual rites and sacred orations should be offered to him. Whence, throughout all his jurisdiction (his diocese) they venerate this man as a distinguished saint. Henry, therefore, wishing to know in what manner the Roman Pontiff had voted him a saint, having investigated all the circumstances of his life, which had occurred more than one hundred and fifty years previously, and having then thoroughly inquired into the particulars respecting him, he appointed judges ; and having instituted commissioners, he commanded that they should investigate the truth, and should neither seek by their decision to gratify the king nor Thomas, although the greater part regarded him as a saint. Hence, verily, they devoted two years to the inquiry, each one giving his decision as he thought just. But at last, those chosen to decide condemned Thomas as having been opposed to the kings of that time, and disloyal and refractory; and they passed a vote of censure against him as a rebel and revolutionist. Wherefore Henry, as being successor to the kings of former ages, condemned Thomas as a rebel and a pest of his country, and gave orders to commit to the fire the coffin which contained his remains. Whence those appointed to this, quickly fulfilled the order they had received. Wherefore one might see the remains, formerly honoured as those of a saint, and consecrated, both dragged along the public road and exposed to the gaze of the populace; and, as one may say, treated with every indignity, and committed to the fire in the middle of the city, but as Thomas the rebel, and one who had been disloyal and disobedient to the kings of England. And these things then Henry caused to be per-

I wish also to make mention of the war of this Henry against Francis king of France ; that one may not only admire the transactions of his political and general administration, but, moreover, also from his successes in war, may discern him to be an energetic and skilful person. He then being in the twenty-fifth year of his age, succeeded to his hereditary dominions ; and it happened also about the same time, that Francis had obtained the kingdom of France. Now it had long been customary with the kings of France, to pay tribute to the kings of England, in consequence of some treaties made between them long ago; since formerly the English, having crossed the strait, became possessed of all Picardy, and advancing forward, penetrated as far as Lutetia, called also Paris. The French, however, under the direction of a certain woman possessing a masculine spirit, put these to flight; and the French, having recovered their cities, advanced to the sea. The English, therefore, not wishing to lose certain maritime cities, after many battles fought between the two nations, came to terms; they agreed to resign, without reserve, to the French, all the maritime cities except Calais; and the French to pay every year fifty thousand pieces of gold, and from these to transport wines, and wheat, and barley, and of other grain, out of France into England. These conventions, therefore, were made, and they were fulfilled every year. Francis then, having, as I said, taken possession of the kingdom, set aside the conventions; giving out, that it is not fitting to the kings of France, who are mighty sovereigns, to pay tribute to the kings of England, who are less powerful. On this account, therefore, Henry proclaimed war against Francis. For these kings of old had been wont, on any slight pretext, to engage in hostilities, and to carry on against each other no ordinary warfare; for, entertaining a natural enmity, they watch each other with jealousy. Henry then, having crossed the strait, and come to the city of Calais, and made his preparations, and collected an army, passed through the interior as far as Guisnes and Terouanne. And his army was said to amount to sixty thousand; the infantry to thirty-five thousand; and the cavalry, both light and heavy armed, to fifteen thousand, beside the other equipment. Having then pitched his camp close to Terouanne, as I said, he awaited the issue. For it was said, that Francis king of the French had advanced into

Picardy, with a large army of cavalry and infantry forces; and was all but at hand, having pitched his camp about three miles off, not being inferior in numbers to the English, but even more numerous. The soldiers, therefore, from both armies making, as was likely, certain onsets and incursions, by some chance a fox sprang forth into the intermediate space. The English being, as was natural, emulous to take the fox, pursued it; the fox, therefore, ran straight forward towards the army of the French; but the English, relaxing nothing, pursued it to the encampment of the French; and the latter, having seen the English coming impetuously towards their camp, issued from the entrenchment and received them; and, as was likely, having put them to flight, as they were but few, they advanced, pursuing and slaying as far as their entrenchment. The English, therefore, conceiving that this was not a day of hostilities between the armies, and that the French had assailed them without a manifesto, having taken their arms, and mounted their horses, and put themselves in order, and spurring their chargers, rushed with much impetuosity against their adversaries. Wherefore the French, through having been suddenly drawn into action, were unable with their heavy cavalry to protect the infantry. And in the discharge of arrows and darts on each side, the English archers were superior; and would soon also have put the French to flight, if night had not come on; for night separated the combatants from each other, and the battle was considered undecisive. And in this unexpected onset there fell of the English, of horse and foot two thousand two hundred; and of the French, quite as many, and more as was said. Both sides, therefore, having thrown up entrenchments, and strengthened their breastworks with mounds, remained within the camp. And after no long time, they had recourse to suspension of arms and negotiations, on an understanding that the French should continue to pay an annual tribute to the English ; that the walls of Terouanne should be pulled down, and that the town of Guines, possessed by the English, should be given up to the French ; and certain other particulars tending to the same things. And being engaged in these things, the agreements being not yet perfected, on one of the nights at early dawn, Francis, king of the French, having taken his two sons, proceeded towards the camp of the English. The watch, therefore, having perceived him, reported it to their king. Henry then, being astonished, bid that he should come to him ; he, therefore, having come with his children, Henry also advanced to meet him, and embraced him ; and being both moved to tears, they banished all appearance of enmity among themselves, for, indeed they were were nearly related to each other. Wherefore, Henry, having suspended a necklace which was about his own neck, being very sumptuous and costly, on the neck of Francis, embraced him. And there was wrought on it the image of Michael, chief captain of the heavenly hosts above, wounding with a spear his adversary Satan, adorned with gold and precious stones; and it was said to be of the value of ten thousand gold pieces. And on the sons of the King he bestowed other presents of value, and likewise very much gold. In like manner also, Francis presented Henry with the collar which he wore on his own breast, and which was itself exceeding costly; and, therefore, having been reconciled to each other, Francis returned to his own camp; and straightway peace and alliance, offensive and defensive, were proclaimed throughout both armies. And, after these things, Henry sailed away for England; but the King of France remained in the country, having obtained peace in exchange for war. And no long time having elapsed, Francis undertook a war . . . . . having passed over the Alps, he arrived in Italy . . . . . and besieged [Pavia] belonging to the Emperor, and having made an entrenchment,

The nobles, therefore, of France, wishing to ransom him, having paid down large sums of money, after a short time received back their King. Indeed it was stated, that four millions of gold pieces were paid to the Emperor for his ransom ; and of these, Henry the King of England lent seven hundred thousand at the entreaties, as was said, of the mother of the King of France. And a considerable time having elapsed, when the King of England demanded back the loan from Francis, payment was not made, but continued delays took place. And thus the matter stood. But the Emperor Charles, after having often put an end to the war with the King of the French, and amicably adjusted the differences subsisting betwixt them, again engaged in no ordinary war. And truly the Emperor marched from Brabant into France, and laid waste its cities ; and having sent an embassy

This man, indeed, having come to England, and having been received with great splendour, and hospitably entertained by the King, fulfilled all the instructions given him by the Emperor; and having incited Henry to war, he returned to the Emperor. And Henry, having assembled a sufficient army from the island, and taken the nobles with him, and crossed the Strait, landed at Calais. Having, therefore, at Calais, arranged and formed his army into battalions, he removed to Boulogne; and, having formed an entrenchment, he besieged the city. Now the town of Boulogne, one of the most conspicuous among those in Picardy, stands on the shore of the ocean, having a commodious harbour; and is situate in a vale in the midst of a hilly district, but cultivated and arable; it is distant from Calais eighteen miles, and is subject to the King of the French. Thither, therefore, Henry having come, and having thrown up an entrenchment, and planted cannon, was continually assaulting the wall of the city. Those within the city, indeed, made a very gallant resistance. Thence they also with cannon kept off the besiegers. However, the ordnance of Henry prevailed over these ; and, having with the cannon battered down certain portions of the wall, he was just on the point of becoming master of the city. Those within the city, therefore, seeing the extreme danger they were in, sent ambassadors to Henry entreating that he would not utterly destroy them, nor give them up for pillage to the soldiery. And if for the sake of the city these things were done, that he would allow them to remove from it, and pass into the continent of France, and not to treat with extreme severity those of the same faith; and if he was at variance with their King, he would find them by no means culpable in this. When those who were deputed had made their requests with much earnestness, Henry, taking compassion, commanded them to remove from the city, and declared that no one should hinder them from going whithersoever they chose, with those belonging to them; and that they should have a truce for four days to change their abode. The deputation, therefore, announced these things to those in the city. And they having unexpectedly heard these things, without delay removed themselves from the city. fortified the place, and built and strengthened certain forts and bas-and having transplanted very many of those from the island into it, and stationed a sufficient guard and made it safe; and already also the season verging towards winter, and hindering him from advancing further in the expedition, he returned to Calais with his forces. And having, as was natural, strengthened that town and made it safe, having with his followers crossed the Strait, he returned to the island, and arrived at the city of London. And after this, Francis the King of France sent one of his sons, with a numerous army, for the recovery of the city; and having besieged it for some considerable time, and when he could not succeed in making himself master of the place, having built a fort on one of the neighbouring hills, and surrounded it with walls and ramparts, and planted cannon, and placed a sufficient guard in it, he daily with his ordnance molested the city; and he himself, with the residue of his army, returned to his father. But the garrison in the fort occasionally did damage to the city; and, in like manner, those in the city, and in other forts, retaliated upon them. In this situation then were the parties above mentioned.

But it was said, that the king of France, at the commencement of spring, was preparing with numerous forces and a large armament to invade England; and he sent an embassy to the nobles of Scotland . . . . . against Henry, and he furnished them with money and provisions, . . . . . And Henry also put himself into a posture of defence, and gave orders, that . . . . . and no small fleet should be equipped, and made other preparations for war. And these things, indeed, thus fell out.

But I will resume the things before mentioned by me; I mean what relates to Gerardus the ambassador, who was sent to Henry from the Emperor; and how, upon the termination of the matters which related to himself he dismissed him. This Gerardus then, after frequent negotiations with Henry, when the proposals made by the Emperor had been received and agreed upon, was allowed to depart. But I, being minded to continue here, requested permission from the ambassador. And he having reluctantly yielded to my wishes, and having furnished me with a horse and arms, and a maintenance, sent me away well pleased; but he himself returned to the emperor.

And I, wishing to proceed further into the island, took advantage for this purpose of the expedition of Henry against those of Scotland. For Henry, having assembled a considerable force, both of those of the island, and moreover of foreign troops not a few, sent it against the people of Scotland. And there were of Italians no small number, and of Spaniards, and moreover also of Argives from Peloponnesus, having for their commander that Thomas from Argos, of whose courage, and prudence, and experience in wars, mention shall be made in the sequel. Having joined myself, therefore, to this Thomas, I set out with the others to the war against the Scotch. And having proceeded as far as the river Tweed, which separates England from Scotland, we encamped somewhere near the fortresses on the banks. Our light armed cavalry, therefore, . . . . . daily making incursions, drove off booty . . . . ., laid waste the country, and all the neighbourhood . . . . ., and sacked some small towns. The Scotch, therefore, having submitted, sent an embassy to Henry, and surrendered some of their provinces and cities, and obtained a suspension of hostilities; and we returned to London. And having already treated of Scotland, and the tribes inhabiting it, as well as its nature and position, the excellence of the soil, &c. I shall omit further mention of these. But I must now proceed to speak of our return to London, and the circumstances connected therewith.

Henry then having fitted out an armament, as I said, and appointed Paget admiral, sent it against the French. And the armament consisted of a hundred and fifty ships, which were long and decked; they had the shape, indeed, of round ships, but were not however of so great burden, for they had rowers, and were impelled by rowing. And they performed all the manœuvres which are customary with gallies; and had decks and brazen beaks. And of these there were forty; and of large ships sixty; and of other ships of burden, being likewise ships of war, fifty. And of certain others, carrying corn and warlike stores, not a few. Such then was the equipment of the armament of the English.

Ὁ δὲ Γάλλων βασιλέως μειζοτέρας παρατάξεως γέγονε· καὶ γὰρ ἐς διακοσίας καὶ πεντήκοντα νῆας, καὶ ἐπ' ἐκείνας εἶναι ἐλέγοντο· ἐξ ὧν, τριήρεις μὲν ἦσαν τριάκοντα· νῆαι δὲ μεγάλαι κατάφρακτοι πεντήκοντα πρὸς τοῖς ἑκατὸν· ἄλλαι δὲ σιταγωγοὶ καὶ σκευοφόροι πλέον τῶν ἐξήκοντα. And the king of the French possessed a still greater equipment, for they were said to amount to two hundred and fifty ships, and more too; of which thirty were gallies, and one hundred and fifty were large ships; and others, more than sixty, carried corn and warlike stores. And in addition to these, also a very large ship, such as never in the ocean . . . . . has any one seen. For it was said . . . . . in capaciousness the hull of the ship had been excellently adapted for conveying and receiving. And this he furnished with very large cannon; and with so many as to make them equal in number to those of large cities, as well as in the equipment of other arms. And it had one thousand five hundred men, both soldiers and mariners; so that when sailing on the ocean, no one would suppose it to be a ship, but some island running with a favourable wind, and having sails. This very large ship then, together with the rest, sailed from France to England. For when, indeed, the wind blew more strongly, then it also, propelled by the sails, followed after; but when on the contrary the sea was calm, then the gallies, having cables fastened from it, towed it along. And in this immense ship, something of the following nature chanced to take place. Whilst it was borne along on the sea, and sailing with a favourable wind, those who were cooking the victuals having neglected the fire, it caught some contiguous portion of the ship. And to so great a pitch had the conflagration arisen, that they were unable to subdue it. Whence the ship, being composed of combustible materials, was entirely consumed by the flames. And that part, indeed, which stood above the water was destroyed by the fire; but that which was underneath, sunk down into the deep. And of the crew, as many as could get into boats, or on some spars, reached the other ships in safety; the other vessels were saved; but on the other hand, as many as . . . . . or knew the French having fitted out such an armament, and appointed as admiral Robert, constable of France, sent it, as I said, against the country of the English. The two armaments, therefore, having approached near to each other, durst not come to a close engagement ; but assailed each other at a distance with missiles and cannon shot. And sometimes, indeed, the gal-

 English which had strayed from the fleet, and sent them and their crews to ships of the English retaliated in like manner on the ships of the French.

 And many men were destroyed on both sides, and many of the vessels were season being spent, and winter having come on, it separated them from

P. 7, l. 3.—Antonia. This name is probably corrupt, and Wintonia should, perhaps, be substituted; but I am at a loss what to propose for Danebium and Dartenicum.

P. 12, l. 6°. “That because much wool was employ’d to uses not so beneficiall to the kingdome, and sometimes transported by strangers, it was decreed, that none should buy wooll in some principall shires (to the number of twenty-eight), but those who would make cloth or yarne thereof; and that strangers should not buy any till the Purification of our Lady.”—“But this being a law that might likewise have his inconveniency, was continued only for ten years, as it had been in some former kings’ times.” Herbert, p. 319.

P. 14.—Among the artizans and tradesmen of London, were frequent instances of jealousy and grudge towards foreigners. A remarkable instance of this occurred in the reign of Henry VIII. an. 1517, which is related at large by Stow, p. 506, and Herbert, p. 67. The cause is thus set forth by Stow: “There grew a great hart-burning and malicious grudge amongst the Englishmen of the City of London against strangers, and, namelie, the artificers found themselves sore grieved, for that such numbers of strangers were permitted to resort hither with their wares, and to exercise handie craftes, to the great hinderance and impoverishing of the King's liege people."

Sometimes the goods of foreigners were publicly seized without any previous warning, both in England and France. Henry VIII. having sharply remonstrated with the French King for his duplicity, the latter "caused all the Englishmen's goods that remained to be seized on, through his kingdome, and especially those at Bourdeaux; which seemed so much the unjust, that divers of our merchants had not onely bought wines there with ready money, but payd custome for it." Herbert, p. 123. "The Cardinall, pursuing his intentions (as the Emperour had done first in Spaine to the English and French), seizeth on the goods of the subjects of Charles. The consequence of this was, that our merchants presently found the like measure in the Low Countries, to the great prejudice of that intercourse and commerce which for many ages had passed betwixt both nations." Herbert, p. 193-4. This national animosity was still very great in the time of Sully, who was an eye-witness of it during his embassy to London in 1603, and which led him to say in his Memoirs, pp. 13, 14: "Il est certain que les Anglois nous haissent, et d'une haine si forte et si generale, qu'on seroit tenté de la mettre au nombre des dispositions naturelles de ce peuple," and otherwise to draw a very unfavourable picture of our nation. But it is most justly observed by the editor of this great statesman's Memoirs, on the passage: "C'est un des plus heureux effets de la culture des arts, et du progrès des sciences, d'avoir dissipé ces préjugés et ces partialités, qu'ont produites la haine et la jalousie."

P. 16, l. 1.—And he has spearmen. "Among whom I finde in the Spanish history, there were about 5,000 archers, who, besides their bowes and arrowes, carried halberts, which they pitched upon the ground till their arrows were shot, and then took up againe to doe execution on the enemy." —So says Herbert, p. 20, speaking of some English troops sent into Spain, to act in concert with Ferdinand against the French; and subjoins this remark: "An excellent part of military discipline; and yet not remarkable by our English chroniclers."

P. 19.—Several laws were made from time to time, which had respect to the rearing of horses, for the excellent breed of which the English were famous. The following regulations are found in Herbert: “Order also was taken upon penalty, that all they who had parks should keep two or more mares, according to the greatnesse of the parks, of thirteen handfuls high, for breed of strong horses; and that the stallions should be fourteen handfuls high at least; and this was much to the increase of good horses.” p. 369. That horses feeding on commons, not being of a lawful height, that is to say, not being fifteen handfuls high, at two yeers old, should be seized on by any man for his own use.” . . . “Nevertheless, that horses of small height might be put where mares were not kept.” p. 460.

The breeding of sheep and cattle was much attended to in England in the reigns of Henry VII. and VIII. In the reign of Henry VIII. a law was passed to restrict it; and to encourage tillage, which had been on the decline for fifty years preceding. Indeed, several Acts, at different times during this reign, were passed to this effect. The following extract from Herbert, will shew that theft was not unknown, notwithstanding the severe penalties annexed to it: “Because by the greedinesse of some, who have gotten into their hands much cattell and many farmes, which they have turned from tillage to pasture (especially for sheep) old rents are rayased, prices of things inhansed, and so, much poverty and theft ensued; it was enacted, that no man should have in his own or farmed lands above 2,000 sheep (yet that every temporall person may keep upon his inheritance as many as he will), and that no man shall take and hold above two farmes at once, and those to be in the same parish.” p. 370. See also Stow, p. 511.

P. 20.—With respect to these observations on asses and mules, and horns of cattle, the Coreyrean seems to have followed the opinion of Herodotus, vol. iv. pp. 28, 29, 129.

“Of Albion’s glorious Ile, the wonders whilst I write,
The sundry varying soyles, the pleasures infinite;

Where heate kills not the cold, nor cold expells the heat,
 The calmes too mildly small, nor winds too roughly great,
 Nor night doth hinder day, nor day the night doth wrong,
 The summer not too short, the winter not too long."

P. 31, l. 13.—Cape Gobæum of Ptolemy is supposed by D'Anville to answer to Cape St. Mahé, or Finisterre, in Brittany. Notice de la Gaule, art. Gobæum Promontorium.

P. 33.—With respect to ecclesiastical revenues, the following passages are from Herbert, p. 397: "What a proportion, Sir, doth the clergie now hold, when the fourth part of the revenues of the kingdome is employed that way. For, Sir, when the tenth we pay them in one kind, and the lands they hold in another, are estimated, they amount to this rate or more, as I am informed." Page 377: "They were the third or fourth of the revenues of the land."

P. 35.—Respecting the death of King John, which the Corcyrean evidently alludes to, there are various opinions. Such as wish to become more acquainted with all the details must consult our older historians. The following short extract is from Speed's Hist. Brit. p. 506. King John, "coming (say they) from the Washes to Swinshed Abbey (being of the Cisteaux Order, which of old he had much incensed), hee added new matter of offence as he sate at meat, when, in speech of his enemies too large provision, hee sware, if hee lived but halfe a yeare longer, he would make one halfe-penny loafe as deare as twelve; which to prevent, a monke of that holy habit, whether in love to Lewis, or hate to the King, or pitty on the land, presented him with an envenomed cup (whereof the King commanded him to be his Taster), and became the diabolical instrument of his own and of his Sovereigne's destruction." That King John was not a favourite with the monks, we may conjecture, from the following extract out of Holinshed, vol. ii. p. 192: "The King hasted forward till he came to Wellestreme Sands, where, passing the washes, he lost a great part of his armie, with horses and carriages, so that it was judged to be a punishment appointed by God, that the spoile which had beene gotten and taken out of churches, abbeies, and other religious houses, should perish and be lost by such means, together with the spoilers." See also Rapin's Hist. vol. i. p. 279, who disbelieves the story of his being poisoned, because not mentioned by any of the contemporary historians.

The deceased King was not carried to London to be buried. The following passage from Holinshed, vol. ii. p. 194, points out the place of his interment: "The men of warre that served under his ensignes, being for the more part hired souldiers and strangers, came together, and marching fourth with his bodie, each man with his armour on his backe, in warlike order, conveyed it unto Worcester, where he was pompouslie buried in the Cathedrall Church before the high altar. . . . And bicause he was somewhat fat and corpulent, his bowels were taken out of his bodie, and buried at Croxton Abbie, a house of moonks of the order called Præmonstratenses, in Staffordshire, the abbot of which house was his physician."

P. 37.—The Coreyrean's account of King Henry's wives is incorrect in some particulars. The following is a list of them, together with dates, &c.

Henry VIII. was born at Greenwich, 28th June, 1491, created Prince of Wales (in the year following the death of his eldest brother Prince Arthur) 18th Feb. 1503; ascended the throne 22d April, 1509, at the age of eighteen.

Henry was married at the Bishop of Salisbury's house in Fleet Street, 3d June 1509, to Katharine of Arragon, his brother's widow. They were crowned, 24th June, 1509, at Westminster. Mary, their daughter, afterwards Queen of England, was born May 8, 1515. The validity of their marriage was first questioned by Henry himself, then by the Court of Spain, and afterwards, in 1527, by the Bishop of Tarbe, the French Ambassador. (Rapin, p. 775.) Their divorce was pronounced by the Archbishop of Canterbury, 23d May, 1533. She died 8th January, 1536, at Kimbolton, and was buried at Peterborough. Stow, p. 571. Peterborough was made a Bishoprick in honour of her being buried there.

Henry was privately married, on or about the 25th Jan. 1533, to Anne Boleyn, which marriage was confirmed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, 28th May, 1533, five days after his pronouncing the divorce. She was crowned at Westminster, 1st June, 1533. Their daughter, Elizabeth, afterwards Queen of England, was born 7th September, 1533. Queen Anne was arraigned 15th May, 1536, for prostituting herself to her brother and four others. She was beheaded 19th May, 1536, and buried in the Tower.

Henry married Jane Seymour, 20th May 1536. Their son Edward VI. was born 12th October, 1537. She died 14th October, two days after; and was buried at Windsor, 8th Nov. 1537.

Henry married Anne of Cleves 6th Jan. 1540, at Greenwich; and was divorced from her by Act of Parliament, 9th July following. "Richmond House, and other fair lands, were (said to be) allotted for her maintenance; and she was to have precedence before all, save the Queen and the King's children." Herbert, p. 459. The King offered to confer on her, by letters patent, the name and dignity of his adopted sister, with a pension of four thousand pounds a year; and her choice either to live in England or return home. She preferred England; believing her pension would be thereby more secure. Rapin, vol. i. p. 826. Stow, p. 578, assigns the reasons which led to this divorce, which were, her want of beauty and feature, sundry ill qualities whereof he secretly accused her, his making great doubt that she was no virgin when she came into England, with divers other defects which he said he knew to be in her. He told his physicians, that she was lothesome to him in bed; and that her body was foul and out of order. Moreover, he oft and earnestly urged (the reason assigned by our author), a precontract between her and the Duke of Lorraine's son.—She lived seventeen years after her divorce; died at Chelsea, 15th July, 1557, and was buried at Westminster, 3d August following.

Henry published his marriage with Katharine Howard, 8th August, 1540, at Hampton Court; the King having privately married her some time before. King Henry thanked God, 1st Nov. 1541, for the happiness he enjoyed in this marriage. But on the following day, her lewdness was disclosed; Derham and Mannock having had connexion with her before, and Derham and Culpepper after her marriage with the King. Three ladies had, at sundry times, been severally in the same bed with her and her paramours. This Queen was beheaded, 12th Feb. 1542, on Tower Hill.

Henry married Katharine Parr, 12th July, 1543, at Hampton Court. Henry himself died at Westminster, 28th January, 1547; and was buried at Windsor, 15th February following. Queen Katharine Parr, after Henry's death, married Sir Thomas Seymour; and died in childbed, after being delivered of a daughter, September 1548.

P. 37, l. 12.—There were five several forms of the Pope's Bulls against Henry (says Herbert, p. 394), of which the one approved and made use of, signed, Aug. 30, 1535, but not published till 1538, was to the following effect: The Pope "excommunicates Henry, and all that favour him; and deprives the King of his realm, subjects the whole kingdome to the interdict; declares the issue by Anne illegitimate, forbids allegiance to his subjects, commerce with other states, dissolves all leagues of princes with him, commands the clergie to depart out of England, the nobility to take armes against him," &c. This Bull was drawn up, and signed by the Pope, after the execution by King Henry of some priors and monks, and of Sir Thomas More and Bishop Fisher; and was published, as was said before, in 1538, about three years afterwards, when the bones of Thomas Becket were exhumed, desecrated, and burnt. The effect of the Pope's fulminations was the opposite of what he intended.

P. 40.—In corroboration of the sentiment, that the Roman Catholic faith was not the original Christian creed introduced into England, but only a corrupted innovation, the following extract from Holinshead, vol. iii. p. 195, may be quoted: "Ambrosius Telesinus, who writ in the yeare 540, when the right Christian faith, which Joseph of Arimathea taught the ile of Avalon (now called Glastonbury) reigned in this land, before the proud and bloodthirstie moonke Augustine infected it with the poison of Romish errors), in a certeine ode, &c. . . .

"Wo be to him that dooth not keepe,
From ravening Romish wolves his sheepe,
With staffe and weapon strong."

Respecting the introduction of Christianity into England in the apostles' days, by Joseph of Arimathea, &c. see Speed's Hist. Brit. chap. ix. Bishop Stillingfleet, vol. iii. chap. i. supposes, that the account of Joseph of Arimathea having established a Church in the Isle of Avalon was a fabrication of the monks of Glastonbury, who were desirous of advancing the reputation of their monastery.

P. 43.—By a precipitate and final determination of the Pope and Cardinals at Rome, 23d March, 1533, the marriage with Queen Katharine was pronounced good, and King Henry was commanded to accept her for his wife; and in case of refusal, censures were fulminated against him. Our King became so sensible of the indignity wherewith he was used in this important affair, that he separated himself from the Roman Church, but not from the religion thereof, some few articles only excepted. Herbert, p. 369.

P. 44.—"It will doubtless be surprising to see in this reign the English so patient and submissive to their Sovereign's pleasure, that hardly do we find, from the beginning of the affair of the divorce, that the Parliament refused him any thing, though his demands were very extraordinary; but it is easy to discover the reason. Religion was the sole cause. The King, as it was observed, kept a sort of medium with respect to religion; but as no man could believe it possible for him to remain long in that situation, those who desired the reformation imagined they could not do better than comply with him in all things, to induce him to advance it by degrees. In like manner, the friends of the old religion, seeing such beginnings, were afraid he would proceed; and their opposition but make him finish his work the sooner. So each party striving to gain him to their interest, there resulted for him an authority which none of his predecessors had ever enjoyed, and which he could not have usurped in any other circumstances, without hazarding his crown; but both parties were alike deceived. Henry kept in the same medium all the rest of his life, and made them both feel the sad effects of that absolute power they had so easily suffered him to assume. It is true, he was always so prudent as not to act contrary to law; but he made use of his power to procure such laws as he pleased, and then executed them without mercy." Rapin's Hist. of Eng. p. 806. Similar observations to the above are again introduced by Rapin, p. 845, and appear to have resulted from matured reflections on the public regulations of Henry respecting religion. What these public regulations were, may be seen in Rapin's Hist. pp. 812, 821, 2; Herbert, pp. 403—6, 446, 495. What kind of religion King Henry thought suitable for the people generally, may be seen in Herbert, pp. 293—6, and 534—6.

P. 44, l. 12.—"Two several Seals of King Henry the Eighth have come to my hands, the first differing from the second in these two particulars, viz. the form of the throne and the titles in the circumscription; for the fabric of the King's throne in the first seal is Gothic work, and that in the other Roman. The style in the circumference of the first seal was made use of when he had the title of Defender of the Faith conferred on him by Pope Leo X. an. 1521, viz. HENRICUS VIII. ANGLIE ET FRANCIE REX, FIDEI DEFENSOR, ET DOMINUS HIBERNIE. But being in the year 1534 declared in the Parliament, Head of the Church of England, and afterwards, an. 1541, proclaimed King of Ireland, he caused this second Great Seal to be made, the circle whereof is charged with these words, HENRICUS OCTAVUS, DEI GRACIA, ANGLIE, FRANCIE, ET HIBERNIE REX, FIDEI DEFENSOR, ET IN TERRA, ECCLESIE ANGLICANE ET HIBERNICE SUPREMUM CAPUT, by which it appeareth, that this King caused his seals to be circumscribed with Roman capitals, whereas all the inscriptions of the Kings of England, his predecessors, from Richard the Second inclusive (as you may observe in the circle of their seals) were in old English letters." Sandford's Genealogical History, v. 479. There seems to be no authority for the coin with the trilingual inscription, as described by our author.

P. 51.—A long list of images, relics, and impostures of various kinds is given by Herbert, p. 431 (and some in other places). The following list, containing all of any note: "Our Lady's girdle shewn in eleven places, and her milk in eight. The felt of St. Thomas of Lancaster, a remedy for the head ache ; the pen knife and boots of St. Thomas of Canterbury, and a piece of his shirt, much revered by great-bellied women ; the coals that roasted St. Laurence ; two or three heads of St. Ursula ; Malchus's ear, and the pairing of St. Edmund's nails ; the image of an angel with one wing, which brought hither the spear's head that pierced Christ's side ; an image of our Lady, with a taper in her hand, which burnt nine years together without wasting, till one forswearing himself thereon, it went out, and was now found to be but a piece of wood. The crucifix of Boxley, in Kent, commonly called the Rood of Grace, was a famous imposture, to which many pilgrimages were made, being contrived so as to be able, by the help of springs, to roll the eyes and move the lips, to bow, shake the head, hands, and feet. It was shewn publicly at Paul's Cross, by John Bishop of Rochester ; and after a sermon upon it, there broken in pieces. Another great imposture was at Hales in Gloucestershire, where the blood of Christ brought from Jerusalem, was shewn in a christal vial ; and was said to have this property, that if a man was in a mortal sin, and not absolved, he could not see it ; therefore every man that came to behold this miracle, was forced to continue to make presents till he bribed heaven to give him the sight of so blessed a relict. This was now discovered to be the blood of a duck, renewed every week ; and the one side of the vial was so thick, that there was no seeing through it, but the other was transparent. It was so placed near the altar, that one in a secret place behind could turn which side he pleased outward. There was brought out of Wales a huge image of wood, called Darvel Gatheren, which served for fuel to burn one Frier Forrest, who advised people in confession not to believe the King's supremacy. Besides which, the images of our Lady of Walsingham, of Ipswich, of Penrise, of Islington, and St. John of Osulston, called otherwise Mr. John Shorne, who was said to shut up the Devil in a boot, and many others, were publicly burnt." See also Stow, p. 574.

Relics were sometimes pawned for large sums of money. " I find by our records, that a piece of St. Andrew's finger, covered only with an ounce of silver, being laid to pledge by a monastery for forty pounds, was left unredeemed at the dissolution of the said house ; the King's commissioners, who, upon surrender of any foundation, undertook to pay the debts thereof, refusing to return the price again." Herbert, p. 377.

P. 51, l. 5. — The first monastery of Franciscans in England was founded at Canterbury in the fourth year of Henry III. about 1219, in the life-time of St. Francis, by Agnellus, the first provincial. The English province was next founded after that of France. From their strict observance of the rules of their orders, they were called Observants. Stevens, Add. to Dugdale, vol. i. p. 92, says that “these friers most vehemently opposed King Henry VIII. in the case of the supremacy, and his divorce from Queen Catharine of Austria, for which reason they were expelled their monasteries before any others; and above 200 of them thrown into jayls, 32 of them coupled in chains like dogs, and sent to distant prisons, others banished, the rest condemned to death; some of them dying under confinement for want, others destroyed with stench, and others hanged and quartered.” Stow, p. 561, says, “The first that openly resisted or reprehended the King touching his marriage with Anne Boleine, was one Fryer Peto, of the Order of the Observants.” For an account of this Peto, see Stow in the above-mentioned place. The Order of Franciscans, or Friars Minors, was in a great measure supported by alms till the very period of their dissolution. “For about 30 monasteries of the Order never had any revenues; that of London and others had very small endowments; that of Coventry, its guardians and fathers told the King’s (Henry VIII.) officers, never had any revenues, but always subsisted upon alms.” Stevens, Add. Dugd. vol. i. p. 94.

P. 51.—“The Order of Benedictines was vastly more numerous than that of Franciscans. That Order was established in England under Pope St. Gregory the Great, by St. Augustine, about the year 596, who was the first Archbishop of Canterbury. The Benedictines founded not only several monasteries in England, but also the metropolitan church of Canterbury; and all the Cathedrals that were afterwards erected. Pope John XXII. between the years 1316 and 1334, caused an exact enquiry to be made; and found, that from the founding of the Benedictine Order till that time, there had been of it, 24 Popes, neer 200 Cardinals, 7000 Archbishops, 15,000 Bishops, 15,000 Abbats of renown, and above 40,000 saints and holy men; and the number of monasteries belonging to the Benedictines were so many, that it was almost impossible to ascertain them." Stevens, Add. Dugd. vol. i. p. 164.

P. 58.—Where King Henry suspected any religious artifice, he took care to extort the truth by severe scrutiny, and to punish the actors. Cardinal Wolsey reduced, among the monasteries, that of Beggam in Sussex. "A disguised company, in strange visors, taking the channons along with them, reimplaced them, and so departed; promising, at the ringing of their abbey-bell, to come at all times to their succour; but these apparitions did not long haunt the house, for the King's counsell, understanding hereof, so examined the channons, that at last they confessed the authors, who, therefore, were sent for, and grievously punished." Herbert, p. 173.

P. 59, l. 1.—Elizabeth Barton, or the Holy Maid of Kent, was probably the nun here intended, whose pretended sanctity and intercourse with Heaven drew great multitudes after her. Her history is told at great length by Hall, pp. ccix. 2—ccxxiii. Stow, pp. 568—70, and Rapin, p. 801, make brief mention of her; as also Herbert, pp. 360, 370, 376. Speed, p. 770, says, "Shee gave foorth from God and his saints, by sundry suggestive revelations, that if the King proceeded in his divorce and second marriage, he should not reigne in his realme one moneth after, nor rest in God's favour the space of an houre." She, together with her accomplices, was hung at Tiburn, 21st April, 1534; and her head stuck upon London Bridge. Hall makes her say, in her dying speech, "Because the thynges which I fayned was profitable unto them (the monks), therefore they muche praised me, and bare me in hande that it was the Holy Ghost and not I that dyd them; and then I beyng puft up with their praises, fell into a certain pryde and folishe phantasie with my selfe, and thought I might fayne what I would, which thing hath brought me to this case."

P. 62.—"In some monasteries," says Rapin, p. 807, "were discovered monstrous disorders and horrible crimes, not only with respect to the debaucheries of the friers and nuns; but chiefly on account of the images and relics, for which a shameful trade was driven to enrich the monasteries, by cherishing the people's superstition." And he subjoins in a note the following, as a summary of what Burnet has stated of the corruptions of religious houses: "The King's commissioners found great factions in the houses; and barbarous cruelties exercised by one faction against another, as either of them prevailed. They were all extremely addicted to idolatry and superstition. In some they found the instruments and other tools for multiplying and coining. But for the lewdness of the confessors of nunneries, and the great corruption of that state, whole houses being found almost all with child; for the dissoluteness of abbots, and the other monks and friars, not only with harlots, but married women; and for their unnatural lusts, and other brutish practices; these are not fit to be spoken of. There were abominations equal to any that were in Sodom." Consult also Burnet's Hist. of the Reform. pp. 339—344 of Oxford Ed. 1816.

Herbert, p. 399, tells us, the King commanded, that such monks as were professed under twenty-four years of age, should be set at liberty, as being thought too young to make a vow as they ought, or indeed to keep it; and that they who were above twenty-four when they made their vow, might have leave to depart if they would. At which time, the men, if in orders, should have a priest's habit given them, and forty shillings in money; the nuns should have only a gown, such as secular women wear, and liberty to go whither they would. Thus the King made no difficulty of breaking vows of celibacy or chastity, in cases where it suited his purpose.

P. 70, l. 4.—In contradiction to any statements of Henry's making provision for deserving objects, we find in Herbert, p. 573. "Together with the supernumerary and debauched abbeys, priories, and nunneries, he subverted and extinguished the good and opportune, without leaving any receptacle for such as, through age or infirmity being unapt for secular business, would end their days in a devout and a retired life."

P. 72, l. 10.—"Becket's life and actions being examined," says Herbert, p. 437, "he was declared by our King that he deserved no canoniza-

tion ; and caused his name to be razed out of the kalender, and forbad the keeping of his holiday. His holyday was kept annually on the 7th July ; and every fiftieth year there was a jubilee for fifteen days together ; and indulgence granted to all that visited his shrine." This shrine (for three hundred years, accounted that of one of the greatest saints in heaven) is thus described by Stow, p. 575 : "The shrine of Thomas Becket, in the priory of Christ Church, Canterbury, was likewise taken to the King's use. This shrine was builded about a man's height, all of stone, then upwards of timber plain, within y<sup>e</sup> which was a chest of yron, conteining the bones of Thomas Becket, scull and all, with the wounde of his death, (Sir Reginald Fitz Urse struck a blow on the Archbishop's head in such wise, that the bloud ran downe by his face. Then they stroke at him one after another ; and though he fell to the ground at the second blow, yet they left him not till they had cut and pashed out his braines, and dashed them about upon the church pavement ;" Holinshed, vol. iii. p. 79) ; and the peece cut out of his scull layde in the same wound. The timber worke of this shrine on the outside, was covered with plates of gold, damasked with gold wyer, which ground of gold was againe covered with jewels of golde as rings, 10 or 12 cramped with golde wyer, into the sayd ground of golde, many of those rings having stones in them, broches, images, angelles, precious stones, and great pearles, &c. The spoyle of which shrine, in gold and precious stones, filled two great chestes, such as sixe or seaven strong men coule doe no more then conveie one of them at once out of the church."

Speed says, p. 461, that Becket's old shoe was devoutly kissed by all passengers ; and that his blood almost matched in virtue with our ever blessed Saviour's. And in p. 778, he has the following words : "Such concourse of pilgrime, such pressing to touch him, such creeping and kneeling to his tombe, that the prints of their devotion in the marble stones remaines to this day." Indeed, in such high repute was Becket's shrine, that very few since the time of Henry II. in whose reign he was murdered, had passed to Canterbury without bringing rich presents to it. One of these votaries was no less a personage than Lewis King of France, who on the 23d of Aug. 1179, presented at his shrine "a ryche cup of golde. He gave also the renowned precious stone that was called the Regall of France (King Henry the Eyght put the same in a ring which he wore on his thumbe); he gave to the monkes by his charter, one hundred measures or tuns of wine, to bee payde them yerely at Paris in France; he continued all one night in watching and prayer at the tombe; and in the morning required to be made a brother there, and was admitted." Stow, p. 155. We are further told by Speed, p. 778, that King Lewis asked and obtained, that no passenger betwixt Dover and Whitesand should perish by shipwreck. And Holinshed, vol. iii. p. 103, adds, that Lewis further granted to the same monks, "that whatsoever was bought in his dominions of France to their use, should be free from toll, tallage, and paieng any maner of excise for the same."

Becket's death took place in 1170. His canonization, of which an account is given by Holinshed, vol. iii. p. 85, was, by order of Pope Alexander, in 1173. And his desecration by King Henry VIII. in 1538. His bones, according to most accounts, were burnt by Sir Thomas Cromwell in the same church in which they had long been venerated; but no mention is made in our histories of their ashes having been scattered by being discharged out of a cannon. Herbert, p. 473, speaks of one who lived in those times, "affirming onely, that his bones were scattered amongst so many dead men's, that they could not be found again without some great miracle." Consult also Rapin, p. 818.

P.80.—The following is the account given of this interview between Henry and Francis, in the Memoirs of the Marechal de Fleurange, ch. 67. After relating what took place at the famous meeting of the Cloth of Gold, he says, "Le faiet, les dits princes se partirent merueilleusement bien contents l'ung de l'autre; et en bon ordre, comme ils estoient venus, s'en retournerent, le Roy de France a Ardres, et le Roy d'Angleterre a Ghines, la ou il couchoit de nuict, et de jour se tenoit en la belle maison qu'il avoit fait faire. Le soir vindrent devers le Roy, de par le Roy d'Angleterre, le legat et quelqu'un du conseil, pour regarder la façon et comment ils se pourroient veoir souvent, et pour avoir sûreté l'ung de l'autre; et feust dict que les Royne festoyeroient les Roys, et les Roys les Royne ; et quand le Roy d'Angleterre viendroit a Ardres veoir la Royne de France, que le Roy de France partiroit quant et quant pour aller a Ghines, veoir la Royne d'Angleterre ; et par ainsi ils estoient chascun en ostage l'ung pour l'autre. Le Roy de France, qui n'estoit pas homme soupsonneux, estoit fort marri de quoi ou se fioit si peu en la foi l'ung de l'autre. Il se leva un jour bien matin, qui n'est pas sa coustume, et print deux gentilshommes et un page, les premiers qu'il trouva, et monta a cheval sans estre houzé, avecques une cappe a l'Espaignolle ; et vint devers le Roy d'Angleterre au chasteau de Ghines. Et quand le Roy feust sur le pont du chasteau, tous les Anglois s'emerveillerent fort, et ne scavoient qu'il leur estoit advenu ; et avoit bien deux cent archers sur le dict pont, et estoit le gouverneur de Ghines avecques les dicts archers, lequel feust bien estonné. Et en passant parmi eux, le Roy leur demanda la foy, et qu'ils se rendissent a lui, et leur demanda la chambre du Roy son frere, laquelle lui feust enseignée par ledict gouverneur de Ghines, qui lui dict : Sire, il n'est pas eveillé. Il passe tout oultre, et va jusques a la dicte chambre, heurte a la porte, l'éveille, et entre dedans. Et ne feust jamais homme plus ebashi que le Roy d'Angleterre, et lui dict : Mon frere, vous m'avez faiet meilleur tour que jamais homme ne fist a aultre, et me monstrés la grande fiance que je dois avoir en vous ; et de moi, je me rends votre prisonnier dès cette heure, et vous baille ma foi. Et deffist de son col ung collier qui valloit quinze mille angelots, et pria au Roy de France qu'il le voullust prendre et porter ce jour là pour l'amour de son prisonnier. Et soudain le Roy, qui lui vouloit faire mesme tour, avoit apporté avec lui un bracelet qui valloit plus de trente mille angelots, et le pria quil le portast pour l'amour de lui, laquelle chose il fist, et le lui mist au bras, et le Roy de France print le sien a son col. Et a donc le Roy d'Angleterre voullust se lever, et le Roy de France lui dict qu'il n'auroit point d'autre valet de chambre que lui, et lui chauffa sa chemise, et lui bailla quand il fust levé. Le Roy de France s'en voullust retourner, non-obstant que le Roy d'Angleterre le voullust retenir a disner avecques lui ; mais, pour ce qu'il falloit jouxter apres disner s'en voullust aller, et monta a cheval, et s'en revint a Ardres."

P. 82, l. 1.—The battle of Pavia, in which Francis was made prisoner, was fought on the 25th of February 1525; and his liberation was on the 18th of March 1526. His imprisonment continued above a whole year. On the condition and mode of his liberation, see Herbert, pp. 184—194. “The day after the victory,” says Holinshed, “the King was led prisoner to the roche of Pisqueton, for that the Duke of Millaine, in regard of his proper suretie, consented hardlie that the person of the King should be kept within the castell of Millaine. He was garded with great gelousie and watch.” Herbert, p. 166, says, that Francis was first taken to a monastery near Pavia, being averse to imprisonment in Pavia itself, which he had just before been besieging with a numerous army, and that thence he was conducted to a strong castle called Pissiquiton.” From the duchy of Milan, Francis was conveyed by sea into Spain on June 7th following, and kept a prisoner in the castle of Madrid.” Holinshed, vol. iii. p. 887.

From two short extracts, the one from Hall, and the other from Holinshed, may be seen the contrast, as far as outward demonstration is concerned, in the courts of Spain and England, as regarded the capture of the French King, although the autocrat was in reality overjoyed at it; and King Henry grieved at the preponderance of power thereby accruing to the autocrat. “The temperance and moderation of Charles was above the expectation of his estate, and far contrarie to the course of the time in matters of that nature, for he would not suffer anie bells to be rung, nor bounfires to be made, nor anie other manner of publike demonstrations, such as are used for glorie or gladnesse, alledging with a mind more virtuous than insolent, that such propertie of feasting and rejoicing was due to victories obtained against infidels, but ought to have no shew where one Christian overcame another.” Holinshed, vol. iii. p. 885. — “Saterdaye the xi daie Marche, in the Citie of London for these tydinges wer made greate fiers and triumph; and the Maior and Aldermen road about the City with trumpettes; and much wyne was laied in diverse places of the Citie, that every man might drynke; and on Tower Hill the Ambassadors of Rome, of Flaunders, and Venice, had a greate banket made in a goodly tent, whych pleased them well ; and as thei returned homewarde, all the stretes were full of harnessed men and cressettes, attendyng on the constables, which they preised muche. Sondag, the xii of Marche, the Kyng, accompaynied with the Ambassadors of Rome, of the Emperor, of Scotland, of Venice, of Millain, and Florence, road in his estate to Paule's Church, and there the Cardinall sang masse, and a xi prelates waited on hym in pontificalles ; and after masse was doen, the quere sang Te Deum, and the mynstrelles plaied on every side ; and when all was doen, the Kyng returned to Bridewel, and there kept a solempne dinner." Hall, p. cxxxvi. 2.

P. 83, l. 3.—For an account of the sums due by treaty from Francis to Henry the VIII. see the Memoires of du Bellay, (l. iii. an. 1529,) who was sent by Francis on a special mission to England, to negotiate this affair. " Chose qui fut mal aisée a conduire, pour le mal contentement qu'avoit le Roy d'Angleterre pour n'avoir été appellé ausdits traittés."

P. 90, l. 1.—These Greek soldiers were doubtless light cavalry, commonly called Stradiots, a corruption of στρατιῶται. They were at this time employed by many European states.

P. 92, l. 5.—Steer. Also a very large ship. In July 1545, the French king, " coming to Havre-de-Grace, and commanding his fleet to set sail, his fairest ship (being of eight hundred tun) taking fire, suddenly was burnt." Herbert, p. 526.—Of the above ship, Rapin, p. 841, says : " In seeing the fleet depart, the French King had the vexation to behold one of his largest, called the Grand Carracon, burnt before his face, she having taken fire whilst the anchor was weighing."

The Memoirs of Martin du Bellay furnish the following particulars respecting the loss of this great ship : " Le Roy le sixieme jour de juillet fit faire voile a son armée de mer, laquelle estoit assemblée au Hâvre de Grace, et luy, pour la veoir partir, estoit sur le chef de Caux, dont il pouvoit tout descouvrir. Mais, tirant les ancrs du Carraquon, qui estoit le plus beau navire de la mer de Ponant, et le meilleur a la voile, portant huit cent tonneaux de charge, de dans lequel devoit estre la personne de l'amiral pour le combat, le feu se mit au fougou, tellement qu'on ne le sieut jamais sauver qu'il ne fut consommé en cendres et y avoit cent grosses pieces d'artillerie de bronze, mesmes y estoit l'argent du Roy, lequel fut sauvé. Plusieurs voulans éviter la furie du feu, se precipiterent en la mer; les galleres en sauverent beaucoup; mais depuis que le feu vint au bas dudit navire, elles furent contraintes de prendre le large, car le feu se donna en l'artillerie, de sorte que la batterie qui se faisoit de si grand nombre de pieces, mettoit en fonds tout ce qui se trouvoit devant, derriere et aux costez. Le nombre des navires ordonnez pour l'armée montoit a cent cinquante gros vaisseaux ronds, sans compter soixante flouins et vingt cinq galleres." This writer says the French fleet was commanded by the Admiral d'Annebault (l. x. an. 1545): the term ἐπαρχον, used by our author, seems to denote rather a military than a naval officer.

P. 95.—The sequel of our author's narrative probably went on to describe the operations carried on by the English and French forces in the vicinity of Boulogne. These lasted from the end of 1545 to the spring of 1546, when peace was concluded; and shortly after Henry died. The Memoires of Martin du Bellay supply ample details in regard to this petty warfare.
